I, L I A D

AND

O D Y S S E Y

0 . F

HOMER:

TRANSLATED BY POPE.

A NEW EDITION.

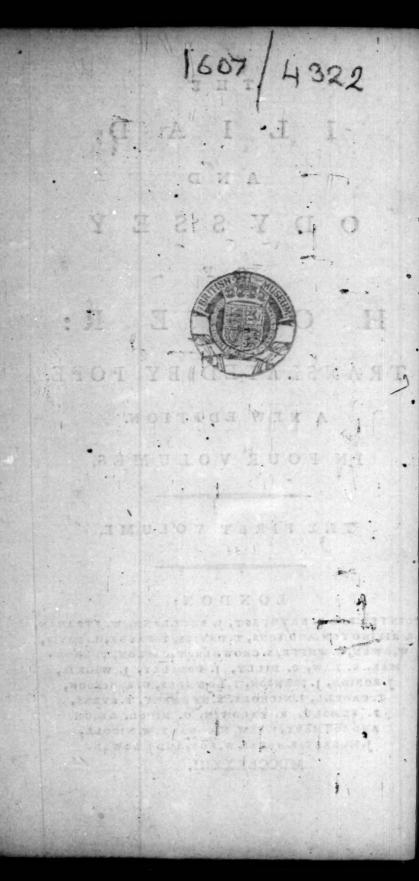

IN FOUR VOLUMES.

THE FIRST VOLUME.

LONDON:

PRINTED FOR C. BATHURST, J. BUCKLAND, W. STRAHAN,
J. RIVINGTON AND SONS, T. DAVIES, T. PAYNE, L. DAVIS,
W. OWEN, B. WHITE, S. CROWDER, T. CASLON, T. LONGMAN, B. LAW, C. DILLY, J. DODSLEY, J. WILKIE,
J. ROBSON, J. JOHNSON, T. LOWNDES, G. ROBINSON,
T. CADELL, J. NICHOLS, E. NEWBERY, T. EVANS,
P. ELMSLY, R. BALDWIN, G. NICOL, LEIGH
AND SOTHEBY, J. BEW, N. CONANT, W. NICOLL, J. MVRRAY, S. HAYES, W. FOX, AND J. BOWEN.

MDCCLXXXIII.

PREFACE.

walk of Art, than to companied the wall and reality

TOMER is univerfally allowed to have had the greatest Invention of any writer whatever. The praise of judgment Virgil has justly contested with him, and others may have their pretentions as to particular excellencies; but his Invention remains yet unrivaled. Nor is it a wonder if he has ever been acknowledged the greatest of poets, who most excelled in that which is the very foundation of poetry. It is the Invention that in different degrees distinguishes all great Geniuses: the utmost stretch of human study, learning, and industry, which mafters every thing besides, can never attain to this. It furnishes Art with all her materials, and without it, Judgment itself can at best but steal wisely: for Art is only like a prudent steward that lives on managing the riches of Nature. Whatever praifes may be given to works of judgment, there is not even a fingle beauty in them to which the Invention must not contribute: as in the most regular gardens, Art can only reduce the beauties of Nature to more regularity, and fuch a figure, which the common eye may better take in, and is therefore more entertained with. And perhaps the reason why common critics are inclined to prefer a judicious and methodical genius to a great and fruitful one, is, because they find it easier for themselves to pur-Vol. I.

fue their observations through an uniform and bounded walk of Art, than to comprehend the vast and various extent of Nature.

Our author's work is a wild paradife, where if we cannot fee all the beauties so distinctly as in an ordered Garden, it is only because the number of them is infinitely greater. It is like a copious nursery, which contains the feeds and first productions of every kind, out of which those who followed him have but selected some particular plants, each according to his fancy, to cultivate and beautify. If some things are too luxuriant, it is owing to the richness of the soil; and if others are not arrived to perfection or maturity, it is only because they are over-run and opprest by those of a stronger nature.

It is to the strength of this amazing invention we are to attribute that unequalled fire and rapture, which is so forcible in Homer, that no man of a true poetical spirit is master of himself while he reads him. What he writes, is of the most animated nature imaginable; every thing moves, every thing lives, and is put in action. If a council be called, or a battle fought, you are not coldly informed of what was said or done as from a third person; the reader is hurried out of himself by the force of the Poet's imagination, and turns in one place to a hearer, in another to a spectator. The course of his verses resembles that of the army he describes,

Oi d'e' l'our, woil to wood xour wara riusilo.
"They pour along like a fire that sweeps the whole earth

" earth before it." It is however remarkable that his fancy, which is every where vigorous, is not discovered immediately at the beginning of his poem in its fullest splendor: it grows in the progress both upon himself and others, and becomes on fire, like a chariot-wheel, by its own rapidity. Exact disposition, just thought, correct elocution, polished numbers, may have been found in a thousand; but this political fire, this "vivida vis animi," in a very few. Even in works where all those are imperfect or neglected, this can overpower criticism, and make us admire even while we disapprove. Nay, where this appears, though attended with abfurdities, it brightens all the rubbish about it, till we fee nothing but its own splendor. This Fire is discerned in Virgil, but difcerned as through a glass, reflected from Homer, more fhining than herce, but every where equal and constant: in Lucan and Statius, it bursts out in sudden, short, and interrupted flashes : in Milton it glows like a furnace kept up to an uncommon ardor by the force of art: in Shakespeare, it strikes before we are aware, like an accidental fire from heaven : but in Homer, and in him only, it burns every where clearly, and every where irrelifibly.

ıt

e

it

e,

(e er

is al

at

Cu

as

nns

he ė-

ole

rth

I shall here endeavour to shew, how this vast Invention exerts itself in a manner superior to that of any poet, through all the main constituent parts of his work, as it is the great and peculiar characteristic which distinguishes him from all other authors.

This strong and ruling faculty was like a powerful star, which, in the violence of its course, drew all things within '

B 2

within its vortex. It feemed not enough to have taken in the whole circle of arts, and the whole compass of nature, to supply his maxims and reflections; all the inward passions and affections of mankind, to surnish his characters; and all the outward forms and images of things for his descriptions; but wanting yet an ampler sphere to expatiate in, he opened a new and boundless walk for his imagination, and created a world for himself in the invention of Fable. That which Aristotle calls the "Soul of poetry," was first breathed into it by Homer. I shall begin with considering him in this part, as it is naturally the first, and I speak of it both as it means the design of a poem, and as it is taken for siction.

Fable may be divided into the Probable, the Allegorical, and the Marvellous. The Probable Fable is the recital of fuch actions as though they did not happen, yet might, in the common course of nature; or of such as, though they did, become fables by the additional episodes and manner of telling them. Of this sort is the main story of an Epic poem, the Return of Ulysses, the fettlement of the Trojans in Italy, or the like. That of the Iliad is the Anger of Achilles, the most fort and fingle subject that ever was chosen by any Poet. Yet this he has supplied with a vaster variety of incidents and events, and crouded with a greater number of councils, speeches, battles, and episodes of all kinds, than are to be found even in those poems whose fchemes are of the utmost latitude and irregularity. The action is hurried on with the most vehement spirit, and its whole duration employs not fo much as fifty days. Virgil, for want of so warm a genius, aided himself by taking in a more extensive subject, as well as a greater length of time, and contracting the defign of both Homer's poems into one, which is yet but a fourth part as large as his. The other Epic Poets have used the same practice, but generally carried it so far as to fuperinduce a multiplicity of fables, destroy the unity of action, and lofe their readers in an unreasonable length of time. Nor is it only in the main defign that they have been unable to add to his invention, but they have followed him in every episode and part of story. If he has given a regular Catalogue of an Army, they all draw up their forces in the same order. If he has funeral games for Patroclus, Virgil has the same for Anchifes; and Statius (rather than omit them) destroys the unity of his action for those of Archemoras. If Ulysfes vifits the shades, the Æneas of Virgil, and Scipio of Silius, are fent after him. If he be detained from his return by the allurements of Calypso, so is Æneas by Dido, and Rinaldo by Armida. If Achilles be abfent from the army on the score of a quarrel through half the poem, Rinaldo must absent himself just as long, on the like account. If he gives his hero a fuit of celestial armour, Virgil and Tasso, make the same present to theirs. Virgil has not only observed this close imitation of Homer, but, where he had not led the way, fupplied the want from other Greek authors. Thus the flory of Sinon and the taking of Troy was copied (fays Macrobius) almost word for word from Pisander, as the loves

11

(e le

d

ts

loves of Dido and Æneas are taken from those of Medea and Jason in Apollinus, and several others in the same manner:

To proceed to the Alegorical Fable: if we reflect upon those innumerable knowledges, those secrets of nature and physical philosophy, which Homer is generally supposed to have wrapped up in his Allegories, what a new and ample scene of wonder may this consideration afford us! how fertile will that imagination appear, which was able to clothe all the properties of elements, the qualifications of the mind, the virtues and vices, in forms and persons; and to introduce them into actions agreeable to the nature of the things they shadowed! This is a field in which no succeeding poets could dispute with Homer; and whatever commendations have been allowed them on this head, are by no means for their invention in having enlarged his circle, but for their judgment in having contracted it. For when the mode of learning changed in following ages, and science was delivered in a plainer manner; it then became as reasonable in the more modern poets to lay it afide, as it was in Homer to make ofe of it. And perhaps it was no unhappy eircumstance for Virgil, that there was not in his time that demand upon him of fo great an invention, as might-be capable of furnishing all those allegorical parts of a poem.

The marvellous fable includes whatever is supernatural, and especially the machines of the Gods. He seems the first who brought them into a system of machinery for poetry, and such a one as makes its greatest impor-.

é

1

£

-

n

6

S

n

S

-

0

,

r

,

n

y

d

t

0

g

-

e

-

æ

.

importance and dignity. For we find those authors who have been offended at the literal notion of the Gods, constantly laying ther accusation against Homer as the chief support of it. But whatever cause there might be to blame his machines in a philosophical or religious view, they are so perfect in the poetic, that mankind have been ever since contented to follow them: none have been able to enlarge the sphere of poetry beyond the limits he has set: every attempt of this nature has proved unsuccessful; and after all the various changes of times and religions, his Gods continue to this day the Gods of poetry.

. We come now to the characters of his persons; and here we shall find no author has ever drawn so many, with so visible and surprizing a variety, or given us fuch lively and affecting impressions of them. Every one has fomething fo fingularly his own, that no painter could have distinguished them more by their features, than the poet has by their manners. Nothing can be more exact than the distinctions he has observed in the different degrees of virtues and vices. The fingle quality of courage is wonderfully diverlified in the Teveral characters of the Iliad. That of Achilles is furious and intractable; that of Diomede forward, yet listening to advice and subject to command: that of Ajax is heavy, and felf-confiding; of Hector, active. and vigilant: the courage of Agamemnon is inspirited by love of empire and ambition; that of Menelaus mixed with foftness and tenderness for his people: we find in Idomeneus a plain direct foldier, in Sarpedon a gala gallant and generous one. Nor is this judicious and aftonishing diversity to be found only in the principal quality which conflitutes the main of each character, but even in the under-parts of it, to which he takes care to give a tincture of that principal one. 'For example, the main characters of Ulysses and Nestor confift in wisdom; and they are distinct in this, that the wisdom of one is artificial and various, of the other natural, open, and regular. But they have, befides, characters of courage; and this quality also takes a different turn in each from the difference of his prudence: for one in the war depends ftill upon caution, the other upon experience. It would be endless to produce instances of these kinds. The characters of Virgil are far from ftriking us in this open manner; they lie in a great degree hidden and undistinguished, and where they are marked most evidently, affect us not in proportion to those of Homer. His characters of valour are much alike; even that of Turnus feems no way peculiar but as it is in a superior degree; and we fee nothing that differences the courage of Menestheus from that of Sergesthus, Cloanthus, or the rest. In like manner it may be remarked of Statius's heroes, that an air of impetuofity runs through them all; the fame horrid and favage courage appears in his Capaneus, Tydeus, Hippomedon, &c. . They have a parity of character, which makes them feem brothers of one family. I believe when the reader is led into this track of reflection, if he will purfue it through the Epic and Tragic writers, he will be convinced how infinitely fuperior fuperior in this point the invention of Homer was to that of all others.

The speeches are to be considered as they flow from the characters, being perfect or defective as they agree or difagree with the manners of those who utter them. As there is more variety of characters in the Iliad, fo there is of speeches, than in any other poem. Every thing in it has manners (as Aristotie expresses it) that is, every thing is acted or spoken. It is hardly credible in a work of fuch length, how fmall a number of lines. are employed in narration. In Virgil the dramatic part is less in proportion to the narrative; and the speeches often confilt of general reflections or thoughts, which might be equally just in any person's mouth upon the same occasion. As many of his persons have no apparent characters, fo many of his speeches escape being applied and judged by the rule of propriety. We oftner think of the author himself when we read Virgil, than when we are engaged in Homer: all which are the effects of a colder invention, that interests us less in the action described: Homer makes us hearers, and Virgil leaves us readers.

If in the next place we take a view of the fentiments, the fame prefiding faculty is eminent in the fublimity and spirit of his thoughts. Longinus has given his opinion, that it was in this part Homer principally excelled. What were alone fufficient to prove the grandeur and excellence of his fentiments in general, is, that they have so remarkable a parity with those of the seripture: Duport, in his Gnomologia Homerica, has collected with justice an excellent modern writer allows, that if Virgil has not so many thoughts that are low and vulgar, he has not so many that are sublime and noble; and that the Roman author seldom rises into very astomishing sentiments, where he is not fired by the Iliad.

If we observe his descriptions, images, and similes, we shall find the invention still predominant. To what else can we ascribe that vast comprehension of images of every fort, where we fee each circumstance of art, and individual of nature fummoned together. by the extent and fecundity of his imagination; to which all things, in their various views, presented themselves in an instant, and had their impressions taken off to perfection, at a heat? Nay, he not only gives us the full prospects of things, but several unexpected peculiarities and fide-views, unobserved by any painter but Homer. Nothing is fo furprizing as the descriptions of his battles, which take up no less than half the Hiad, and are supplied with so vast a variety of incidents, that no one bears a likeness to another; fuch different kinds of deaths, that no two heroes are wounded in the fame manner; and fuch a profusion of noble ideas, that every battle rifes above the last in greatness, horror, and confesion. It is certain there is not near that number of images and descriptions in any Epic Poet; though every one has affifted himfelf with a great quantity out of him: and it is evident of Virgil especially, that he has scarce any comparisons which are not drawn from his mafter.

If we descend from hence to the expression, we see the bright imagination of Homer thining out in the most enlivened forms of it. We acknowledge him the father of poetical diction, the first who taught that language of the Gods to men. His expression is like the colouring of some great masters, which discovers itself to be laid on boldly, and executed with rapidity. It is indeed the ffrongest and most glowing imaginable, and touched with the greatest spirit. Aristotle had reason to fay, He was the only poet who had found out living words; there are in him more daring figures and metaphors than in any good author whatever. An arrow is impatient to be on the wing, and a weapon thirsts to drink the blood of an enemy, and the like. Yet his expression is never too big for the sense, but utily great in proportion to it. It is the fentiment that swells and fills out the diction, which rifes with it, and forms itfelf about it: for in the same degree that a thought is warmer, an expression will be brighter; as that is more strong, this will become more perspicuous: like glass in the furnace, which grows to a greater magnitude and refines to a greater clearness, only as the breath within is more powerful, and the heat more intenfe.

To throw his language more out of profe, Homer feems to have affected the compound epithets. This was a fort of composition peculiarly proper to poetry, not only as it heightened the diction, but as it affisted and filled the numbers with greater found and pomp, and likewise conduced in some measure to thicken the images.

images. On this last consideration I cannot but attribute these also to the fruitsulness of his invention, since (as he has managed them) they are a fort of supernumerary pictures of the persons or things to which they are joined. We see the motion of Hector's plumes in the epithet xogodasod, the landscape of mount Neritus in that of eirosidudde, and so of others; which particular images could not have been insisted upon so long as to express them in a description (though but of a single line) without diverting the reader too much from the principal action or figure. As a metaphor is a short simile, one of these epithets is a short description.

Laftly, if we confider his verfification, we shall be sensible what a share of praise is due to his invention in that. He was not fatisfied with his language as he found it settled in any one part of Greece, but searched through its differing dialects with this particular view, to beautify and perfect his numbers: he considered these as they had a greater mixture of vowels or confonants, and accordingly employed them as the verfe required either a greater smoothness or strength. What he most affected was the Ionic, which has a peculiar fweetness from its never using contractions, and from its custom of resolving the diphthongs into two syllables; fo as to make the words open themselves with a more fpreading and fonorous fluency. With this he mingled the Attic contractions, the broader Doric, and the feebler Æolic, which often rejects its aspirate, or takes off its accent; and compleated this variety by altering ce

1-

uey

in

ieh

fo

of

ch

13 p-

be

in

he ed

v,

ed

0-

eat ar

m

1-

a

ne

c,

e,

y

g

altering some letters with the licence of poetry. Thus his measures, instead of being fetters to his sense, were always in readiness to run along with the warmth of his rapture, and even to give a farther representation of his notions, in the correspondence of their founds to what they fignified. Out of all these he has derived that harmony, which makes us confess he had not only the richest head, but the finest ear in the world. This is fo great a truth, that whoever will but confult the tune of his verses, even without understanding them (with the fame fort of diligence as we daily fee practifed in the case of Italian Operas) will find more sweetness, variety, and majesty of found, than in any other language or poetry. The beauty of his numbers is allowed by the criticks to be copied but faintly by Virgil himself, though they are so just to ascribe it to the nature of the Latin tongue: indeed the Greek has fome advantages both from the natural found of its words, and the turn and cadence of its verse, which agree with the genius of no other language. Virgil was very fenfible of this, and used the utmost diligence in working up a more intractable language to whatfoever graces it was capable of; and in particular never failed to bring the found of his line to a beautiful agreement with its If the Grecian poet has not been so frequently celebrated on this account as the Roman, the only reafon is, that fewer criticks have understood one language than the other. Dionyfius of Halicarnassus has pointed out many of our author's beauties in this kind, in his treatise of the Composition of Words. It fuffices fusions at present to observe of his numbers, that they flow with so much ease, as to make one imagine Homer had no other care than to transcribe as fast as the Muses dictated: and at the same time with so much force and inspiriting vigour, that they awaken and raise us like the sound of a trumpet. They roll along as a plentiful river, always in motion, and always full; while we are born away by a tide of verse, the most rapid, and yet the most fmooth imaginable.

Thus, on whatever fide we contemplate Homer, what principally strikes us is his Invention. It is that which forms the character of each part of his work; and accordingly we find it to have made his fable more extenfive and copious than any other, his manners more lively and ftrongly marked, his speeches more affecting and transported, his fentiments more warm and fublime, his images and defectiptions more full and animated, his expression more raised and daring, and his numbers more rapid and various. I hope, in what has been faid of Virgil, with regard to any of these heads, I have no way derogated from his character. Nothing is more abfurd or endlefs, than the common method of comparing eminent writers by an opposition of particular paffages in them, and forming a judgment from thence of their merit upon the whole. We ought to have a certain knowledge of the principal character and diffinguishing excellence of each: it is in that we are to confider him, and in proportion to his degree in that we are to admire him. No author or man ever excelled

e

h

a

h

.

e

g

-

L

is 18

s, g

of 1-m

to

d

to

at 1-

ed

led all the world in more than one faculty; and as Homer has done this in Invention, Virgil has in Judgment. Not that we are to think Homer wanted Judgment, because Virgil had it in a more eminent degree; or that Virgil wanted Invention, because Homer possest a larger thare of it: each of these great authors had more of both than perhaps any man befides, and are only faid to have less in comparison with one another. Homer was the greater genius, Virgil the better artist. In one we most admire the man, in the other the work: Homer hurries and transports us with a commanding impetuolity, Virgil leads us with an attractive majefty: Homer featters with a generous profusion, Virgil bestows with a careful magnificence: Homer, like the Nile, pours out his riches with a boundless overflow; Virgil like a river in its banks, with a gentle and constant stream. When we behold their battles, methinks the two poets resemble the heroes they celebrate: Homer, boundless and irrefistible as Achilles, bears all before him, and shines more and more as the tumult increases; Virgil, calmly daring like Æneas, appears undiffurbed in the midst of the action; disposes all about him, and conquers with tranquillity. And when we look upon their machines, Homer feems like his own Jupiter in his terrors, shaking Olympus, scattering the lightnings, and firing the heavens; Virgil, like the fame power in his benevolence, counselling with the gods, laying plans for empires, and regularly ordering his whole creation.

But after all, it is with great parts, as with great virtues, they naturally border on some imperfection; and it is often hard to distinguish exactly where the virtue ends, or the fault begins. As prudence may sometimes sink to suspicion, so may a great judgment decline to coldness; and as magnanimity may run up to profusion or extravagance, so may a great invention to redundancy or wildness. If we look upon Homer in this view, we shall perceive the chief Objections against him to proceed from so noble a cause as the excess of this faculty.

Among these we may reckon some of his Marvellous Fictions, upon which so much criticism has been spent, as surpassing all the bounds of probability. Perhaps it may be with great and superior souls, as with gigantic bodies, which, exerting themselves with unusual strength, exceed what is commonly thought the due proportion of parts, to become miracles in the whole; and like the old heroes of that make, commit something near extravagance, amidst a series of glories and inimitable performances. Thus Homer has his speaking Horses, and Virgil his Myrtles distilling Blood, where the latter has not so much as contrived the easy intervention of a Deity to save the probability.

It is owing to the same vast invention, that his similes have been thought too exuberant and full of circumstances. The force of this faculty is seen in nothing more, than in its inability to confine itself to that single circumstance upon which the comparison is grounded: it runs out into embellishments of additional images,

which

at

n;

T-

e-

ne

0-

e-

us

m

is us

nt,

it

tic

th,

on the

X-

er-

nd

nas

a

les

ming gle

jes,

which however are so managed as not to overpower the main one. His similes are like pictures, where the principal figure has not only its proportion given agreeable to the original, but is also set off with occasional ornaments and prospects. The same will account for his manner of heaping a number of comparisons together in one breath, when his fancy suggested to him at once so many various and correspondent images. The reader will easily extend this observation to more objections of the same kind.

If there are others which feem rather to charge him with a defect or narrownels of genius, than an excels of it; those seeming defects will be found upon examination to proceed wholly from the nature of the times he lived in. Such are his groffer representations of the Gods, and the vicious and imperfect manners of his Heroes, but I must here speak a word of the latter, as it is a point generally carried into extremes, both by the cenfurers and defenders of Homer. It must be a strange partiality to antiquity, to think with madam Dacier, "that + those times and manners are so much the more " excellent, as they are more contrary to ours." Who can be so prejudiced in their favour as to magnify the felicity of those ages, when a spirit of revenge and cruelty, joined with the practice of rapine and robbery, reigned through the world; when no mercy was shewn but for Vol. I.

+ Preface to her Homer.

the fake of lucre, when the greatest princes were put to the fword, and their wives and daughters made flayes and concubings? On the other fide, I would not be fo delicate as these modern criticks, who are shocked at the fervile offices and mean employments in which we fometimes fee the herges of Homer engaged. There is a pleasure in taking a view of that simplicity in opposition to the luxury of fucceeding ages, in beholding monarchs without their guards, princes tending their flocks, and princesses drawing water from the springs. When we read Homer, we ought to reflect that we are reading the most ancient author in the heathen world; and those who confider him in this light, will double their pleafure in the perufal of him. Let them think they are growing acquainted with nations and people that are now no more; that they are stepping almost three thousand years back into the remotest antiquity, and entertaining themselves with a clear and surprising vision of things no where elfe to be found, the only true mirror of that ancient world. By this means alone their greatest obstacles will vanish; and what usually creates their diflike, will become a fatisfaction.

This confideration may farther ferve to answer for the constant use of the same epithets to his Gods and heroes, such as the far-darting Phæbus, the blue-ey'd Pallas, the swift-stooted Achilles, &c. which some have censured as impertinent and tediously repeated. Those of the Gods depended upon the powers and offices then believed to belong to them, and had contracted a weight

and

to es

fo

at ve

is fi-

ng

eir

s.

re

d;

ole

nk

ole oft ty,

ng

rue

eir

tes

for ind

y'd ave

ofe hen ght

and

3

and veneration from the rites and folemn devotions in which they were used: they were a fort of attributes with which it was a matter of religion to falute them on all occasions, and which it was an irreverence to omit. As for the epithets of great men, Monf. Boileau is of opinion, that they were in the nature of furnames, and repeated as fuch; for the Greeks, having no names derived from their fathers, were obliged to add fome other diffinction of each perfon; either naming his parents expresly, or his place of birth, profession, or the like: as Alexander the fon of Philip, Herodotus of Halicarnassus, Diogenes the Cynic, &c. Homer therefore complying with the custom of his country, used fuch distinctive additions as better agreed with poetry. And indeed we have fomething parallel to these in modern times, such as the names of Harold Harefoot, Edmund Ironfide, Edward Long-shanks, Edward the Black Prince, &c. If yet this be thought to account better for the proprietry than for the repetition, I shall add a farther conjecture. Hefiod, dividing the world into its different ages, has placed a fourth age between the brazen and the iron one, of "Heroes distinct from other men: a divine race, who fought at Thebes and Troy, are called Demi-Gods, and live by the care of Jupiter in the islands of the bleffed."*, I w among the divine honours which were paid them, they might have this also in common with the Gods, not to be mentioned without the solemnity of an epithet, and such as might be acceptable to them by its celebrating their families, actions, or qualities.

* Hefiod, lib. i. ver. 153, &c.

What other cavils have been raifed against Homer, are fuch as hardly deserve a reply, but will yet be taken notice of as they occur in the course of the work. Many have been occasioned by an injudicious endeavour to exalt Virgil; which is much the same, as if one should think to raise the superstructure by undermi-, ming the foundation: one would imagine by the whole course of their parallels, that these criticks never so much as heard of Homer's having written first; a confideration which whoever compares these two poets, ought to have always in his eye. Some accuse him for the fame things which they overlook or praise in the other; as when they prefer the fable and moral of the Æneis to those of the Iliad, for the same reasons which might fet the Odysses above the Æneis: as that the hero is a wifer man; and the action of the one more beneficial to his country than that of the other: or else they blame him for not doing what he never defigned; as because Achilles is not as good and perfect a prince as Æneas, when the very moral of his poem required a contrary character: it is thus that Rapin judges in his comparison of Homer and Virgil. Others felect those particular passages of Homer, which are not so laboured as some that Virgil drew out of them: this is the whole management of Scaliger in his Poetices. Others quarrel with what they take for low and mean expressions, fome-

h ir

r, be k.

a-

if ii-,

ole

fo

n-

ts,

for

the

the ich ero

ne-

hey

as

as da

his nose

red hole

uar-

ons,

me-

sometimes through a false delicacy and refinement, oftner from an ignorance of the graces of the original; and then triumph in the aukwardness of their own translations; this is the conduct of Perault in his Parallels. Lastly, there are others, who, pretending to a fairer proeceding, diftinguish between the personal merit of Homer, and that of his work; but when they come to affign the causes of the great reputation of the Iliad, they found it upon the ignorance of his times and the: prejudice of those that followed: and in pursuance of this principle, they make those accidents (such as the contention of the cities, &c.) to be the causes of his fame, which were in reality the consequences of his merit. The same might as well be said of Virgil, or any great author, whose general character will infallibly raise many casual additions to their reputation. This is the method of Mons. de la Motte; who yet confesses upon the whole, that in whatever age Homer had lived, he must have been the greatest poet of his nation, and that he may be faid in this sense to be the master even of those who surpassed him.

In all these objections we see nothing that contradicts his title to the honour of the chief invention; and as long as this (which is indeed the characteristic of poetry itself) remains unequalled by his followers, he still continues superor to them. A cooler judgment may commit sewer faults, and be more approved in the eyes of one fort of criticks: but that warmth of fancy will carry the loudest and most universal applauses, which holds the heart of a reader under the strongest enchantment.

C

Homer

Homer not only appears the inventor of poetry, but excels all the inventors of other arts in this, that he has fwallowed up the honour of those who succeeded him. What he has done admitted no increase, it only left room for contradiction or regulation. He shewed all the stretch of fancy at once; and if he has failed in some of his slights, it was but because he attempted every thing. A work of this kind seems like a mighty tree which rises from the most vigorous seed, is improved with industry, slourishes, and produces the finest fruit; nature and art conspire to raise it; pleasure and profit join to make it valuable: and they who find the justest faults, have only said, that a few branches (which run luxurient through a richness of nature) might be lopped into form to give it a more regular appearance.

Having now spoken of the beauties and defects of the original, it remains to treat of the translation, with the same view to the chief characteristic. As far as that is seen in the main parts of the poem, such as the sable, manners, and sentiments, no translator can prejudice it but by wilful omissions or contractions. As it also breaks out in every particular image, description, and simile; whoever lessens or too much softens those, takes off from this chief character. It is the first grand duty of an interpreter to give his author entire and unmaimed; and for the rest, the diction and versification only are his proper province; since these must be his own; but the others he is to take as he finds them.

It should then be considered what methods may afford some equivalent in our language for the graces of these the Greek. It is certain no literal translation can be just to an excellent original in a superior language: but it is a great mistake to imagine (as many have done) that a rash paraphrase can make amends for this general defect; which is no less in danger to lose the spirit of an ancient, by deviating into the modern manners of expression. If there be sometimes a darkness, there is often a light in antiquity, which nothing better preferves than a version almost literal. I know no liberties' one ought to take, but those which are necessary for transfusing the spirit of the original, and supporting the poetical style of the translation: and I will venture to fay, there have not been more men misled in former times by a fervile dull adherence to the latter, than have been deluded in ours by a chimerical infolent hope of raifing and improving their author. It is not to be doubted that the fire of the poem is what a translator should principally regard, as it is most likely to expire in his managing: however, it is his fafest way to be content with preferving this to his utmost in the whole, without endeavouring to be more than he finds his author is, in any particular place. It is a great fecret in writing to know when to be plain, and when poetical and figurative; and it is what Homer will teach us, if we will but follow modestly in his footsteps. Where his diction is bold and lofty, let us raife ours as high as we can; but where his is plain and humble, we ought not to be deterred from imitating him by the fear of incurring the cenfure of a mere English critick. Nothing that belongs to Homer feems to have been more commonly mistaken than-than the just pitch of his style: fome of his translators having swelled into fustian in a proud confidence of the fublime; others funk into flatness in a cold and timorous notion of simplicity. Methinks I see these different followers of Homer, some sweating and straining after him by violent leaps and bounds (the certain figns of false mettle); others slowly and servilely creeping in his train, while the poet himself is all the time proceeding with an imaffected and equal majesty before them. However, of the two extremes, one could fooner pardon frenzy than frigidity: no author is to be envied for fuch commendations as he may gain by that character of style, which his friends must agree together to call simplicity, and the rest of the world will call dullness. There is a graceful and dignified simplicity, as well as a bald and fordid one, which differ as much from each other as the air of a plain man from that of a floven: it is one thing to be tricked up, and another not to be dreffed Simplicity is the mean between oftentation and rufticity.

This pure and noble simplicity is no where in such perfection as in the Scripture and our author. One may affirm, with all respect to the inspired writings, that the divine spirit made use of no other words but what were intelligible and common to men at that time, and in that part of the world; and as Homer is the author nearest to those, his style must of course bear a greater resemblance to the sacred books than that of any other writer. This consideration (together with what has been observed of the parity of some of his thoughts)

may

P

n

p

n

VE

gr

gr

gi

m aft

aff

thi

rec

of too

of ]

onl

the

.]

are

eyé

his

may methinks induce a translator on the one hand to give into several of those general phrases and manners of expression, which have attained a veneration even in our language from being used in the Old Testament; as on the other, to avoid those which have been appropriated to the Divinity, and in a manner configned to mystery and religion.

For a farther preservation of this air of simplicity, a particular care should be taken to express with all plainness those moral sentences and proverbial speeches which are so numerous in this poet. They have something venerable, and as I may say oracular, in that unadorned gravity and shortness with which they are delivered: a grace which would be utterly lost by endeavouring to give them what we call a more ingenious (that is, a more modern) turn in the paraphrase.

Perhaps the mixture of some Græcisms and old wordse after the manner of Milton, if done without too much affectation, might not have an ill effect in a version of this particular work, which most of any other seems to require a venerable antique cast. But certainly the use of modern terms of war and government, such as platoon, campaign, junto, or the like (into which some of his translators have fallen) cannot be allowable; those only excepted, without which it is impossible to treat the subjects in any living language.

There are two peculiarities in Homer's diction which are a fort of marks, or moles, by which every common eye distinguishes him at first sight: those who are not his greatest admirers look upon them as defects, and those who are, seem pleased with them as beauties. I speak of his compound epithets, and of his repetitions. Many of the former cannot be done literally into English without destroying the purity of our language. I believe such should be retained as slide easily of themselves into an English compound, without violence to the ear or to the received rules of composition; as well as those which have received a fanction from the authority of our best poets, and are become familiar through their use of them; such as the cloud-compelling Jove, &c. As for the rest, whenever any ean be as fully and significantly express in a single word as in a compound one, the course to be taken is obvious.

those

Some that cannot be fo turned as to preferve their full image by one or two words, may have justice done them by circumlocution; as the epithet eireo i Quanos to a mountain, would appear little or ridiculous translated literally "leaf-shaking," but affords a majestic idea in the periphrasis: " The lofty mountain shakes his waving woods." Others that admit of differing fignifications, may receive an advantage by a judicious variation according to the occasions on which they are introduced. For example, the epithet of Apollo, εκνβόλις, or "far-shooting," is capable of two explications; one literal in respect to the darts and bow, the enfigns of that God; the other allegorical with regard to the rays of the fun: therefore in fuch places where Apollo is represented as a God in person, I would use the former interpretation; and where the effects of the fun-

t,

n

e;

tr

01

fun are described, I would make choice of the latter. Upon the whole, it will be necessary to avoid that perpetual repetition of the same epithets which we find in Homer; and which, though it might be accommodated (as has been already shewn) to the ear of those times, is by no means so to ours: but one may wait for opportunities of placing them, where they derive an additional beauty from the occasions on which they are employed; and in doing this properly, a translator may at once shew his fancy and his judgment.

As for Homer's repetitions, we may divide them into three forts; of whole narrations and speeches, of fingle fentences, and of one verse or hemistich. I hope it is not impossible to have such a regard to these, as neither to lose so known a mark of the author on the one hand, nor to offend the reader too much on the other. The repetition is not ungraceful in those speeches where the dignity of the speaker renders it a fort of insolence to alter his words; as in the messages from Gods to men, or from higher powers to inferiors in concerns of state, or where the ceremonial of religion feems to require it, in the folemn forms of prayers, oaths, or the like. In other cases, I believe, the best rule is, to be guided by the nearness, or diftance, at which the repetitions are placed in the original: when they follow too close, one may vary the expression; but it is a question whether a professed translator be authorized to omit any: if they be tedious, the author is to answer for it.

It only remains to speak of the Versification. Homer (as has been said) is perpetually applying the sound to the sense, and varying it on every new subject. This is indeed one of the most exquisite beauties of poetry, and attainable by very sew: I know only of Homer eminent for it in the Greek, and Virgil in Latin. I am sensible it is what may sometimes happen by chance, when a writer is warm, and fully possest of his image: however it may be reasonably believed they designed this, in whose verse it so mainifestly appears in a superior degree to all others. Few readers have the ear to be judges of it; but those who have, will see I have endeavoured at this beauty.

Upon the whole, I must confess myself utterly incapable of doing justice to Homer. I attempt him inno other hope but that which one may entertain without much vanity, of giving a more tolerable copy of him than any entire translation in verse has yet done. We have only those of Chapman, Hobbes, and Ogilby. Chapman has taken the advantage of an immeasurable length of verse, notwithstanding which, there is fcarce any paraphrase more loose and rambling than his. He has frequent interpolations of four or fix lines, and I remember one in the thirteenth book of the Odysses, ver. 312. where he has spun twenty verses out of two. He is often mistaken in so bold a manner, that one might think he deviated on purpose, if he did not in other places of his notes infift so much upon verbal trifles. He appears to have had a strong affectation of extracting new meanings out of his author, infomuch as to promise, in his rhyming preface, a poem of the mysteries he had revealed in Homer: and perhaps he endeavoured to ftrain the obvious fense to this end. His expression is involved in fustian, a fault for which he was remarkable in his original writings, as in the tragedy of Buffy d'Amboife, &c. In a word, the nature of the man may account for his whole performance; for he appears from his preface and remarks to have been of an arrogant turn, and an enthusiast in poetry. His own boast of having finished half the Iliad in less than fifteen weeks, fhews with what negligence his version was per-But that which is to be allowed him, and which very much contributed to cover his defects, is a daring fiery spirit that animates his translation, which is fomething like what one might imagine Homer himfelf would have writ before he arrived at years of discretion.

face,

Hobbes has given us a correct explanation of the fense in general; but for particulars and circumstances he continually lops them, and often omits the most beautiful. As for its being esteemed a close translation, I doubt not many have been led into that error by the shortness of it, which proceeds not from his following the original line by line, but from the contractions abovementioned. He sometimes omits whole similes and sentences, and is now and then guilty of mistakes, into which no writer of his learning could have fallen, but through carelessness. His poetry, as well as Ogilby's, is too mean for criticism.

It is a great loss to the poetical world that Mr. Dryden did not live to translate the Hiad. He has left us only the first book, and a small part of the fixth; in which if he has in some places not truly interpreted the fense, or preserved the antiquities, it ought to be excused on account of the haste he was obliged to write in. He seems to have had too much regard to Chapman, whose words he sometimes copies, and has unhappily followed him in passages where he wanders from the original. However, had he translated the whole work, I would no more have attempted Homer after him than Virgil, his version of whom (notwithstanding some human errors) is the most noble and spirited translation I know in any language. But the fate of great geniuses is like that of great ministers, though they are confessedly the first in the commonwealth of letters, they must be envied and calumniated only for being at the head of it:

That which in my opinion ought to be the endeavour of any one who translates Homer, is above all things to keep alive that spirit and fire which makes his chief character: in particular places, where the sense can bear any doubt, to follow the strongest and most poetical, as most agreeing with that character; to copy him in all the variations of his style, and the different modulations of his numbers; to preserve, in the more active or descriptive parts, a warmth and elevation; in the more sedate or narrative, a plainness and solemnity; in the speeches, a fulness and perspicuity; in the sentences, a shortness and gravity: not to neglect even the little sigures and turns on the words, nor sometimes the very cast of the periods; neither to omit

t

n

fe

So

th

omit nor confound any rites or customs of antiquity: perhaps too he ought to include the whole in a shorter compass, than has hitherto been done by any translator, who has tolerably preserved either the sense or poetry. What I would farther recommend to him, is to study his author rather from his own text, than from any commentaries, how learned foever, or whatever figure they may make in the estimation of the world; to consider him attentively in comparison with Virgil above all the ancients, and with Milton above all the moderns. Next these, the archbishop of Cambray's Telemachus may give him the truest idea of the spirit and turn of our author, and Bossu's admirable treatise of the Epic poem the justest notion of his defign and conduct. But after all, with whatever judgment and study a man may proceed, or with whatever happiness he may perform such a work, he must hope to please but a few; those only who have at once a tafte of poetry, and competent learning. For to fatsify fuch as want either, is not in the nature of this undertaking; fince a mere modern wit can like nothing that is not modern, and a pedant nothing that is not Greek.

What I have done is submitted to the publick, from whose opinions I am prepared to learn; though I fear no judges so little as our best poets, who are most sensible of the weight of this task. As for the worst, whatever they shall please to say, they may give me some concern as they are unhappy men, but none as they are malignant writers. I was guided in this trans-translation by judgments very different from theirs, and by persons for whom they can have no kindness, if an old observation be true, that the strongest antipathy in the world is that of fools to men of wit. Mr. Addison was the first whose advice determined me to undertake this talk, who was pleased to write to me upon that occasion in such terms as I cannot repeat without vanity. I was obliged to Sir Richard Steele for a very early recommendation of my undertaking to the publick. Dr. Swift promoted my interest with that warmth with which he always ferves his friend. The humanity and frankness of Sir Samuel Garth are what I never knew wanting on any occasion. I must also acknowledge, with infinite pleasure, the many friendly offices, as well as fincere criticisms of Mr. Congreve, who had led me the way in translating some parts of Homer; as I wish for the sake of the world he had prevented me in the rest. I must add the names of Mr. Rowe and Dr. Parnell, though I shall take a farther opportunity of doing justice to the last, whose good-nature (to give it a great panegyrick) is no less extensive than his learning. The favour of these gentlemen is not entirely undeferved by one who bears them fo true an affection. But what can I say of the honour so many of the Great have done me, while the first names of the age appear as my fubscribers, and the most distinguished patrons and ornaments of learning as my chief encouragers. Among these it is a particular pleasure to me to find, that my highest obligations are to such who have done most honour to the name of poet: that his

C

C

t

a

p

N

d

to

H

m

his grace the duke of Buckingham was not displeased I should undertake the author to whom he has given (in his excellent Essay) so complete a praise.

" Read Homer once, and you can read no more;

" For all Books elfe appear fo mean, fo poor,

" Verse will seem Prose: but still persist to read,

" And Homer will be all the Books you need."

That the earl of Halifax was one of the first to favour me, of whom it is hard to say whether the advancement of the polite arts is more owing to his generosity or his example. That such a genius as my lord Bolingbroke, not more distinguished in the great scenes of business, than in all the useful and entertaining parts of learning, has not refused to be the critick of these sheets, and the patron of their writer. And that so excellent an imitator of Homer as the noble author of the tragedy of Heroic Love, has continued his partiality to me, from my writing Pastorals, to my attempting the Iliad. I cannot deny myself the pride of confessing, that I have had the advantage not only of their advice for the conduct in general, but their correction of several particulars of this translation.

e

f

r

e

n

y

f

·e

h

it

8

I could fay a great deal of the pleasure of being diftinguished by the earl of Carnarvon; but it is almost absurd to particularize any one generous action in a person whose whole life is a continued series of them. Mr. Stanhope, the present secretary of state, will pardon my desire of having it known that he was pleased to promote this affair. The particular zeal of Mr. Harcourt (the son of the late lord chancellor) gave me a proof how much I am honoured in a share of his friendship. I must attribute to the same motive that of several others of my friends, to whom all acknowledgments are rendered unnecessary by the privileges of a familiar correspondence: and I am satisfied I can no way better oblige men of their turn, than by my silence.

Vol. I. D friendship.

In short, I have found more patrons than ever Homer wanted. He would have thought himself happy to have met the fame favour at Athens, that has been shewn me by its learned rival, the university of Oxford. If my author had the Wits of after-ages for his defenders, his translator has had the Beauties of the prefent for his advocates; a pleasure too great to be changed for any fame in reversion. And I can hardly envy him those pompous honours he received after death, when I reflect on the enjoyment of fo many agreeable obligations, and eafy friendships, which make the satisfaction This distinction is the more to be acknowof life. ledged, as it is shewn to one whose pen has never gratified the prejudices of particular parties, or the vanities of particular men. Whatever the fuccess may prove, I fhall never repent of an undertaking in which I have experienced the candour and friendship of so many persons of merit; and in which I hope to pass some of those years of youth that are generally loft in a circle of follies, after a manner neither wholly unuseful to others, nor difagreeable to myfelf.

ain to state a all sevened ma I down wen been

The auticular acat of Mr.

. with the or it

The Contraction of Achilles and A cancerdon.

IN the region of rows the Greekey brevings Likely lame accord word tradet ha T. H'E' pales of the act to two benefits a consequent, and the ten or Arbilian the fact in Arbilian and the fact of the Arbilian and the fact of the fact of Arbilian and fact of the fact of

FIRST BOOK

chande her and being him and the OFTHE or small seguine and the second and second and or of the blanch broads of the showing I L I A D.

Charles and the contract of the contract of the fellows to a bibble not wit a comment out you and a comment of region moderated and the Drawn and the second and t the property of the property of the formation than the TO IN SOME TO AND HOLD IN THE SAME THE SAME Their good store and another the store that it is Chronica Comes, that changes to Course, and lathy

. columnità en

THE ARGUMENT.

The Contention of Achilles and Agamemnon.

IN the war of Troy, the Greeks, having facked fome of the neighbouring towns, and taken from thence two beautiful captives, Chryfeis and Brifeis, allotted the first to Agamemnon, and the last to Achilles. Chryses, the father of Chryseis, and priest of Apollo, comes to the Grecian camp to ransom her; with which the action of the poem opens, in the tenth year of the fiege. The priest being refused, and insolently dismissed by Agamemnon, intreats for vengeance from his God, who inflicts a pestilence on the Greeks. Achilles calls a council, and encourages Chalcas to declare the cause of it, who attributes it to the refusal of Chryseis. The king being obliged to send back his captive, enters into a furious contest with Achilles, which Nestor pacifies; however, as he had the absolute command of the army, he seizes on Brifeis in revenge. Achilles in discontent withdraws himself and his forces from the rest of the Greeks; and complaining to Thetis, she supplicates Jupiter to render them fensible of the wrong done to her fon, by giving victory to the Trojans. Jupiter granting her fuit incenses Juno, between whom the debate runs high, till they are reconciled by the address of Vulcan.

The time of two and twenty days is taken up in this book; nine during the plague, one in the council and quarrel of the princes, and twelve for Jupiter's stay with the Æthiopians, at whose return Thetis prefers her petition. The scene lies in the Grecian camp, then changes to Chrysa, and lastly to Olympus.

the folgoniability and this or book off

But oh! relieve a wretched partitle for

THE

And Troylered oil ellerg be new youT buA

I L I A D.

BOOK I.

A CHILLES' wrath, to Greece the direful spring Of woes unnumber'd, heavenly Goddess sing!
That wrath which hurl'd to Pluto's gloomy reign
The souls of mighty Chiefs untimely slain;
Whose limbs unbury'd on the naked shore,
Devouring dogs and hungry vultures tore;
Since great Achilles and Atrides strove,
Such was the sovereign doom, and such the will of Jove!

Declare, O Muse! in what ill-fated hour Sprung the fierce strife, from what offended power? 10 Latona's son a dire contagion spread, And heap'd the camp with mountains of the dead; The king of men his reverend priest defy'd, And for the king's offence the people dy'd.

For Chryses sought with costly gifts to gain
His captive daughter from the victor's chain.
Suppliant the venerable father stands,
Apollo's awful ensigns grace his hands:
By these he begs; and lowly bending down,
Extends the sceptre and the laurel crown.

D 3

He

He fued to all, but chief implor'd for grace The brother-kings, of Atreus' royal race.

Ye kings and warriors! may your vows be crown'd,
And Troy's proud walls lie level with the ground.

May Jove restore you, when your toils are o'er,
Safe to the pleasures of your native shore.

But oh! relieve a wretched parent's pain,
And give Chryseis to these arms again;
If mercy fail, yet let my presents move,
And dread avenging Phæbus, son of Jove.

The Greeks in shouts their joint assent declare, The priest to reverence, and release the fair. Not so Atrides: he, with kingly pride, Repuls'd the sacred sire, and thus reply'd:

Hence on thy life, and fly these hostile plains, 35
Nor ask, presumptuous, what the king detains;
Hence, with thy laurel crown, and golden rod,
Nor trust too far those ensigns of thy God.
Mine is thy daughter, priest, and shall remain;
And prayers, and tears, and bribes, shall plead in vain;
Till time shall riste every youthful grace,
And age dismiss her from my cold embrace,
In daily labours of the loom employ'd,
Or doom'd to deck the bed she once enjoy'd.
Hence then, to Argos shall the maid retire,
Far from her native soil, and weeping sire.

The trembling priest along the shore return'd, And in the anguish of a father mourn'd. Disconsolate, not daring to complain, Silent he wander'd by the sounding main:

Till,

Till, fafe at distance, to his God he prays, The God who darts arround the world his rays.

O Smintheus! sprung from fair Latona's line,
Thou guardian power of Cilla the divine,
Thou source of light! whom Tenedos adores,
And whose bright presence gilds thy Chrysa's shores:
If e'er with wreaths I hung thy sacred fane,
Or fed the slames with fat of oxen slain;
God of the silver bow! thy shafts employ,
Avenge thy servant, and the Greeks destroy.

Thus Chryses pray'd: The favouring power attends,
And from Olympus' lofty tops descends.
Bent was his bow, the Grecian hearts to wound;
Fierce as he mov'd, his silver shafts resound.
Breathing revenge, a sudden night he spread,
And gloomy darkness roll'd about his head.
The fleet in view, he twang'd his deadly bow,
And hissing fly the feather'd fates below.
On mules and dogs the infection first began;
And last, the vengeful arrows fix'd in man.
For nine long nights through all the dusky air
The Pyres thick-flaming shot a dismal glare.
But ere the tenth revolving day was run,
Inspir'd by Juno, Thetis' god-like son
Conven'd to council all the Grecian train;

For much the Goddess mourn'd her heroes slain.
Th' assembly leated, rising o'er the rest,
Achilles thus the king of men addrest:

Why leave we not the fatal Trojan shore, And measure back the seas we crost before?

The

D 4

The plague destroying whom the sword would spare, 'Tis time to fave the few remains of war. But let some prophet, or some sacred sage, Explore the cause of great Apollo's rage; Or learn the wasteful vengeance to remove, $5 By mystic dreams, for dreams descend from Jove. If broken vows this heavy curse have laid, Let altars smoke, and hecatombs be paid. So heaven aton'd shall dying Greece restore, And Phœbus dart his burning shafts no more. 90

He faid, and fat: when Chalcas thus reply'd: Chalcas the wife, the Grecian priest and guide, That facred feer, whose comprehensive view The past, the present, and the future knew: Uprifing flow, the venerable fage . Thus fpoke the prudence and the fears of age.

Belov'd of Jove, Achilles! would'ft thou know Why angry Phœbus bends his fatal bow? First give thy faith, and plight a prince's word Of fure protection, by thy power and fword. For I must speak what wisdom would conceal, And truths, invidious to the great, reveal. Bold is the task, when subjects grown too wise, Instruct a monarch where his error lies; For though we deem the short-liv'd fury past, 'Tis fure, the Mighty will revenge at last.

To whom Pelides. From thy inmost foul Speak what thou know'ft, and speak without controul, Ev'n by that God I fwear, who rules the day, To whom thy hands the vows of Greece convey, 110

And

And whose blest oracles thy lips declare;
Long as Achilles breathes this vital air,
No daring Greek of all the numerous band!
Against his priest shall lift an impious hand:
Not ev'n the chief by whom our hosts are led,
The king of kings, shall touch that sacred head.

Encourag'd thus, the blameless man replies;
Nor vows unpaid, nor slighted facrifice,
But he, our chief, provok'd the raging pest,
Apollo's vengeance for his injur'd priest,
Nor will the God's awaken'd fury cease,
But plagues shall spread, and suneral fires increase,
Till the great king, without a ransom paid,
To her own Chrysa send the black-ey'd maid.
Perhaps, with added sacrifice and prayer,
The priest may pardon, and the God may spare.

The prophet spoke; when with a gloomy frown
The monarch started from his shining throne;
Black choler fill'd his breast that boil'd with ire,
And from his eye-balls stassed the living fire.

Augur accurst! denouncing mischief still,
Prophet of plagues, for ever boding ill!
Still must that tongue some wounding message bring,
And still thy priestly pride provoke thy king?
For this are Phæbus' oracles explor'd,
To teach the Greeks to murmur at their Lord?
For this with salfeshoods is my honour stain'd,
Is heaven offended, and a priest profan'd;
Because my prize, my beauteous maid I hold,
And heavenly charms prefer to prosser'd gold?

A maid,

A maid, unmatch'd in manners as in face, Skill'd in each art, and crown'd with every grace. Not half so dear were Clytæmnestra's charms, When first her blooming beauties blest my arms. Yet if the Gods demand her, let her fail; Our cares are only for the public weal : Let me be deem'd the hateful cause of all, And fuffer, rather than my people fall. The prize, the beauteous prize, I will refign, So dearly valued, and so justly mine. But fince for common good I yield the fair, My private loss let grateful Greece repair; Nor unrewarded let your prince complain, That he alone has fought and bled in vain. Infatiate king (Achilles thus replies) 155 Fond of the power, but fonder of the prize! Would ft thou the Greeks their lawful prey should yield, The due reward of many a well-fought field? The spoils of cities raz'd, and warriours flain, We share with justice, as with toil we gain: 160 But to refume whate'er thy avarice craves, (That trick of tyrants) may be borne by flaves. Yet if our chief for plunder only fight, The spoils of Ilion shall thy loss requite, Whene'er by Jove's decree our conquering powers 165 Shall humble to the dust her lofty towers. Then thus the king. Shall I my prize refign With tame content, and thou poffest of thine? Great as thou art, and like a God in fight,

Think not to rob me of a soldier's right

1

¥

I

9

C

I

V

V

S

V

I

170 At

31

ILIAD, Book I. At thy demand shall I restore the maid? First let the just equivalent be paid; Such as a king might ask; and let it be A treasure worthy her, and worthy me. Or grant me this, or with a monarch's claim, This hand shall seize some other captive dame. The mighty Ajax shall his prize refign, Ulysses' spoils, or ev'n thy own be mine. The man who fuffers, loudly may complain: And rage he may, but he shall rage in vain. But this when time requires -It now remains We launch a bark to plow the watery plains, And waft the facrifice to Chryfa's shores, With chosen pilots, and with labouring oars. Soon shall the fair the fable ship afcend, And some deputed prince the charge attend; This Creta's king, or Ajax shall fulfill, Or wife Ulyffes fee 'perform'd our will: Or, if our royal pleasure shall ordain, Achilles' felf conduct her o'er the main ; Let fierce Achilles, dreadful in his rage, The God propitiate, and the pest affuage. At this, Pelides, frowning stern, reply'd: O tyrant, arm'd with insolence and pride! Inglorious flave to interest, ever join'd With fraud, unworthy of a royal mind! What generous Greek, obedient to thy word. Shall form an ambush, or shall lift the sword? What cause have I to war at thy decree? The distant Trojans never injur'd me; 200 To

0

5

d,

To Phthia's realms no hostile troops they led, Safe in her vales my warlike courfers fed; Far hence remov'd, the hoarfe-refounding main, And walls of rocks, fecure my native reign, Whose fruitful soil luxuriant harvests grace; Rich in her fruits, and in her martial race. Hither we fail'd, a voluntary throng, T' avenge a private, not a public wrong: What else to Troy th' assembled nations draws, But thine, ungrateful, and thy brother's cause? 210 Is this the pay our blood and toils deferve; Difgrac'd and injur'd by the man we ferve? And dar'ft thou threat to fnatch my prize away, Due to the deeds of many a dreadful day? A prize as small, O tyrant! match'd with thine, 215 As thy own actions if compar'd to mine. Thine in each conquest is the wealthy prey, Though mine the fweat and danger of the day. Some trivial presents to my ships I bear, Or barren praises pay the wounds of war. But know, proud monarch, I'm thy flave no more; My fleet shall waft me to Thessalia's shore. Left by Achilles on the Trojan plain, What spoils, what conquests, shall Atrides gain?

To this the king: Fly, mighty warrior! fly,
Thy aid we need not, and thy threats defy.
There want not chiefs in such a cause to fight,
And Jove himself shall guard a monarch's right.
Of all the kings (the God's distinguish'd care)
To power superiour none such hatred bear: 230

Strife

1

H

I

7

H

I

N

7

F

Ί

A

Ji

W

03

to 0

5

Strife and debate thy restless soul employ, And wars and horrours are thy favage joy. If thou hast strength, 'twas heaven that strength bestow'd, For know, vain man! thy valour is from God. Hafte, launch thy veffels, fly with fpeed away, Rule thy own realms with arbitrary fway: I heed thee not, but prize at equal rate Thy short-liv'd friendship, and thy groundless hate. Go, threat thy earth-born Myrmidons; but here 'Tis mine to threaten, prince, and thine to fear. Know, if the God the beauteous dame demand, My bark shall waft her to her native land; But then prepare, imperious prince! prepare, Fierce as thou art, to yield thy captive fair: Ey'n in thy tent I'll feize the blooming prize, Thy lov'd Brife's with the radiant eyes. Hence shalt thou prove my might, and curse the hour, Thou stood's a rival of imperial power; And hence to all our host it shall be known, That kings are fubject to the Gods alone.

Achilles heard, with grief and rage opprest,
His heart swell'd high, and labour'd in his breast.
Distracting thoughts by turns his bosom rul'd,
Now fir'd by wrath, and now by reason cool'd:
That prompts his hand to draw the deadly sword, 255
Force through the Greeks, and pierce their haughty lord;
This whispers soft, his vengeance to controul,
And calm the rising tempest of his soul.
Just as in anguish of suspence he stay'd,
While half unsheath'd appear'd the glittering blade, 260
Minerya

Minerva fwift descended from above,	alie!
Sent by the fifter and the wife of Jove
(For both the princes claim'd her equal care);	12452
Behind she stood, and by the golden hair	1 10
Achilles feiz'd; to him alone confest;	265
A fable cloud conceal'd her from the rest.
He fees, and kidden to the Goddess cries,	4
Known by the flames that sparkle from her eyes.
Descends Minerva in her guardian care,	T Col
A heavenly witness of the wrongs I bear	270
From Atreus' fon: then let those eyes that view	4
The daring crime, behold the vengeance too.
Forbear! (the progeny of Jove replies)	1 14
To calm thy fury I forfake the skies:
Let great Achilles, to the Gods refign'd,	275
To reason yield the empire o'er his mind.	1 3 6 7
By awful Juno this command is given;
The king and you are both the care of heaven.	ned i
The force of keen reproaches let him feel,
But sheath, obedient, thy revenging steel.	280
For I pronounce (and trust a heavenly power)
Thy injur'd honour has its fated hour,
When the proud monarch shall thy arms implore,
And bribe thy friendship with a boundless store.
Then let revenge no longer bear the fway,	285
Command thy passions, and the Gods obey.  To her Pelides. With regardful ear
*Tis just, O Goddess! I thy dictates hear.
Hard as it is, my vengeance I suppress:
Those who revere the Gods, the Gods will blefs.	290
and the second particular of the second partic	He

A I V O T A F

(BSIWT

He faid, observant of the blue-ey'd maid; Then in the sheath return'd the shining blade. The Goddess swift to high Olympus slies, And joins the sacred senate of the skies.

5

0

5

0

5

e

Nor yet the rage his boiling breaft forfook, Which thus redoubling on Atrides broke. O monster! mix'd of insolence and hear, Thou dog in forehead, but in heart a deer! When wert thou known in ambush'd fights to dare, Or nobly face the horrid front of war? 'Tis ours, the chance of fighting fields to try, . Thine to look on, and bid the valiant die. So much 'tis fafer through the camp to go, And rob a subject, than despoil a foe. Scourge of thy people, violent and base! Sent in Jove's anger on a flavish race, Who, loft to fense of generous freedom past, Are tam'd to wrongs, or this had been thy last. Now by this facred fceptre hear me fwear, Which never more shall leaves or blossoms bear, 310 Which sever'd from the trunk (as I from thee) On the bare mountains left its parent tree; This sceptre, form'd by temper'd steel to prove An enfign of the delegates of Jove, From whom the power of laws and justice springs (Tremendous oath! inviolate to kings): By this I fwear, when bleeding Greece again Shall call Achilles, the shall call in vain. When, flush'd with flaughter, Hector comes to spread The purpled shore with mountains of the dead, Then

Then shalt thou mourn th' affront thy madness gave Forc'd to deplore, when impotent to save:

Then rage in bitterness of soul; to know

This act has made the bravest Greek thy foe.

He spoke; and furious hurl'd against the ground 323 His sceptre starr'd with golden studs around. Then sternly silent sat. With like disdain, The raging king return'd his frowns again.

To calm their passions with the words of age, Slow from his seat arose the Pylian sage, Experienc'd Nestor, in persuasion skill'd, Words sweet as honey from his lips distill'd; Two generations now had pass'd away, Wise by his rules, and happy by his sway; Two ages o'er his native realm he reign'd, And now th' example of the third remain'd. All view'd with awe the venerable man; Who thus with mild benevolence began:

What shame, what woe is this to Greece! what joy
To Troy's proud monarch, and the friends of Troy!
That adverse Gods commit to stern debate
The best, the bravest of the Grecian state.
Young as ye are, this youthful heat restrain,
Nor think your Nestor's years and wisdom vain.
A Godlike race of heroes once I knew,
Such, as no more these aged eyes shall view!
Lives there a chief to match Pirithous' fame,
Dryas the bold, or Ceneus' deathless name;
Theseus, endued with more than mortal might,
Or Polyphemus, like the Gods in fight?

With

With these of old to toils of battle bred, In early youth my hardy days I led; Fir'd with the thirst which virtuous envy breeds, And fmit with love of honourable deeds. Strongest of men, they pierc'd the mountain boar, 7 Rang'd the wild deferts red with monsters gore, 356 And from their hills the shaggy Centaurs tore: Yet these with foft, persuasive arts I sway'd; When Nestor spoke, they listen'd and obey'd. If in my youth, ev'n these esteem'd me wise; 360 Do you, young warriours, here my age advise. Atrides seize not on the beautious slave; That prize the Greeks by common fuffrage gave: Nor thou, Achilles, treat our prince with pride; Let kings be just, and sovereign power preside. 365 Thee, the first honours of the war adorn, Like Gods in strength, and of a Goddeis born; Him, awful majesty exalts above The powers of earth, and scepter'd sons of Jove. Let both unite, with well-confenting mind, So shall authority with strength be join'd. Leave me, O king! to calm Achilles' rage; Rule thou thyfelf, as more advanc'd in age. Forbid it Gods! Achilles should be loft, The pride of Greece, and bulwark of our hoft. 375 This faid, he ceas'd: the king of men replies: Thy years are awful, and thy words are wife. But that imperious, that unconquer'd foul, No laws can limit, no respect controul. Before his pride must his superiours fall, His word the law, and he the lord of all? Vol. I. Him

9/

5

h

Him must our hosts, our chiefs, ourself obey?

What king can bear a rival in his sway?

Grant that the Gods his matchless force hath given;

Has foul reproach a privilege from Heaven?

385

Here on the monarch's speech Achilles broke,
And furious, thus, and interrupting spoke.
Tyrant, I well deserved thy galling chain,
To live thy slave, and still to serve in vain;
Should I submit to each unjust decree:
Command thy vasials, but command not me.
Seize on Brises, whom the Grecians doom'd.
My prize of war, yet tamely see resum'd;
And seize secure; no more Achilles draws.
His conquering sword in any woman's cause.
The Gods command me to forgive the past;
But let this first invasion be the last:
For know, thy blood, when next thou dar'st invade,
Shall stream in vengeance on my reeking blade.

At this they ceas'd; the stern debate expir'd: 400

The chiefs in fullen majefty retir'd.

Achilles with Patroclus took his way,
Where near his tents his hollow veffels lay.
Mean time Atrides launch'd with numerous oars
A well-rigg'd ship for Chrysa's facred shores:

High on the deck was fair Chryse's plac'd,
And sage Ulysses with the conduct grac'd:
Safe in her sides the hecatomb they stow'd,
Then swiftly sailing, cut the siquid road.

The hoft to expiate, next the king prepares, 410 With pure luftrations, and with folemn prayers.

Wafh'd

1

N

P

C

B

Wash'd by the briny wave, the pious train
Are cleans'd, and cast th' ablutions in the main.
Along the shore whole hecatombs were laid,
And bulls and goats to Phœbus' altars paid.

The sable fumes in curling spires arise,
And wast their grateful odours to the skies.

The army thus in facred rites engag'd,
Atrides still with deep resentment rag'd.
To wait his will two sacred heralds stood,
Talthybius and Eurybates the good.
Haste to the sierce Achilles' tent (he cries)
Thence bear Brise's as our royal prize:
Submit he must; or, if they will not part,
Ourself in arms shall tear her from his heart.

425

5

0

05

10

b'i

Th' unwilling heralds act their lord's commands;
Penfive they walk along the barren fands:
Arriv'd, the Hero in his tent they find,
With gloomy afpect, on his arm reclin'd.
At awful distance long they filent stand,
Loth to advance, or speak their hard command;
Decent confusion! This the godlike man
Perceiv'd, and thus with accent mild began.

With leave and honour enter our abodes,
Ye facred ministers of men and Gods!
I know your message; by constraint you came;
Not you, but your imperious lord I blame.
Patroctus haste, the fair Brise's bring;
Conduct my captive to the haughty king.
But witness, heralds, and proclaim my vow,
Witness to Gods above, and men below!

E 3

But:

But first, and loudest, to your prince declare,
That lawless tyrant whose commands you bear;
Unmov'd as death Achilles shall remain,
Though postrate Greece should bleed at every vein: 445
The taging chief in frantic passion lost,
Blind to himself, and useless to his host,
Unskill'd to judge the future by the past,
In blood and slaughter shall repent at last.

Patroclus now th' unwilling beauty brought;
She, in foft forrows, and in pensive thought,
Past silent, as the heralds held her hand,
And oft look'd back, slow moving o'er the strand.
Not so his loss the fierce Achilles bore;
But sad retiring to the sounding shore,
O'er the wild margin of the deep he hung,
That kindred deep from whence his mother sprung:
There, bath'd in tears of anger and disdain,
Thus loud lamented to the stormy main.

O parent Goddess! since in early bloom
Thy son must fall, by too severe a doom;
Sure, to so short a race of glory born,
Great Jove in justice should this span adorn:
Honour and same at least the Thunderer ow'd,
And ill he pays the promise of a God;
If you proud monarch thus thy son defies,
Obscures my glories, and resumes my prize.

Far from the deep recesses of the main,
Where aged Ocean holds his watery reign,
The Goddess-mother heard. The waves divide; 470
And like a mist she rose above the tide;

Beheld

N

Beheld him mourning on the naked shores, And thus the forrows of his soul explores. Why grieves my son? Thy anguish let me share, Reveal the cause, and trust a parent's care.

475

He deeply fighing faid: To tell my woe, Is but to mention what too well you know. From Thebe facred to Apollo's name, (Action's realm) our conquering army came, With treasure loaded and triumphant spoils, Whose just division crown'd the foldier's toils; But bright Chryfeis, heavenly prize! was led By vote felected, to the general's bed. The priest of Phoebus sought by gifts to gain His beauteous daughter from the victor's chain; 485 The fleet he reach'd, and lowly bending down, Held forth the sceptre and the laurel crown, Entreating all: but chief implor'd for grace The brother-kings of Atreus' royal race: The generous Greeks their joint confent declare, 490 The priest to reverence, and release the fair; Not fo Atrides: He, with wonted pride, The fire infulted, and his gifts deny'd: Th' infulted fire (his God's peculiar care) To Phæbus pray'd, and Phæbus heard the prayer: A dreadful plague ensues; th' avenging darts Incessant fly, and pierce the Grecian hearts. A prophet then, inspir'd by heaven arose, And points the crime, and thence derives the woes: Myfelf the first th' assembled chiefs incline

Then

T' avert the vengeance of the power divine;

Then rifing in his wrath, the monarch storm'd; Incens'd he threaten'd, and his threats perform'd: The fair Chryseis to her fire was fent, With offer'd gifts to make the God relent; 305 But now he feiz'd Brifeis' heavenly charms, And of my valour's prize defrauds my arms, Defrauds the votes of all the Grecian train; And service, faith, and justice, plead in vain. But, Goddess! thou thy suppliant son attend, 510 To high: Olympus' fhining court ascend, Urge all the ties to former fervice ow'd, And fue for vengeance to the thundering God. Oft hast thou triumph'd in the glorious boat, That thou stood'st forth of all th' æthereal host, 515 When bold rebellion shook the realms above, Th' undaunted guard of cloud-compelling Jove. When the bright partner of his awful reign, The warlike maid, and monarch of the main, The traitor-gods, by mad ambition driven, Durft threat with chains th' omnipotence of heaven. Then call'd by thee, the monster Titan came, (Whom Gods Briareus, Men Ægeon name) Through wondering tkies enermous stalk'd along; Not *he that thakes the folid earth fo ftrong: With giant-pride at Jove's high throne he stands, And brandish'd round him all his hundred hands; Th' affrighted Gods confess'd their awful lord, They dropt the fetters, trembled, and ador'd This, * Neptune.

This, Goddess, this to his remembrance call,

Embrace his knees, at his tribunal fall;

Conjure him far to drive the Grecian train,

To hurl them headlong to their fleet and main,

To heap the shores with copious death, and bring

The Greeks to know the curse of such a king:

Let Agamemnon lift his haughty head

O'er all his wide dominion of the dead,

And mourn in blood, that e'er he durst disgrace

The boldest warriour of the Grecian race.

Unhappy fon! (fair Thetis thus replies, While tears celestial trickle from her eyes) Why have I born thee with a mother's threes, To fates averse, and nurs'd for future woes? So fhort a space the light of heaven to view! So fhort a space! and fill'd with forrow too! O might a parent's careful wish prevail, Far, far from Ilion should thy vessels sail, And thou, from camps remote, the danger shun, Which now, alas! too nearly threats my fon. Yet (what I can) to move thy fuit I'll go To great Olympus-crown'd with fleecy fnow. Mean time, fecure within thy ships, from far Behold the field, nor mingle in the war. The fire of Gods and all th' æthereal train, On the warm limits of the farthest main, Now mix with mortals, nor difdain to grace The feafts of Æthiopia's blameless race; Twelve days the powers indulge the genial rite, Returning with the twelfth revolving light.

E 4

Then

Then will I mount the brazen dome, and move 560 The high tribunal of immortal Jove.

The Goddess spoke: the rolling waves unclose;
Then down the deep she plung'd from whence she rose,
And left him forrowing on the lonely coast,
In wild resentment for the fair he lost.

In Chrysa's port now sage Ulysses rode;
Beneath the deck the destin'd victims stow'd;
The sails they surl'd, they lash'd the mast aside,
And drop'd their anchors, and the pinnace ty'd.
Next on the shore their hecatomb they land,
Chryse's last descending on the strand.
Her, thus returning from the surrow'd main,
Ulysses led to Phoebus' sacred fane;
Where at his solemn altar, as the maid
He gave to Chryses, thus the hero said.

Hail reverend priest! to Phoebus' awful dome A suppliant I from great Atrides come: Unransom'd here receive the spotless fair; Accept the hecatomb the Greeks prepare; And may thy God who scatters darts around, Aton'd by sacrifice, desist to wound.

At this, the fire embrac'd the maid again, So fadly lost, so lately sought in vain.

Then near the altar of the darting king, Dispos'd in rank their hecatomb they bring:

With water purify their hands, and take

The facred offering of the salted cake;

While thus with arms devoutly rais'd in air,

And solemn voice, the priest directs his prayer.

God

580

585

HLIAD, Book I.

God of the filver bow, thy ear incline,
Whose power incircles Cilla the divine;
Whose sacred eye thy Tenedos surveys,
And gilds fair Chrysa with distinguish'd rays!
If, fir'd to vengeance at thy priest's request,
Thy direful darts inslict the raging pest;
Once more attend! avert the wasteful woe,
And smile propitious, and unbend thy bow.

So Chryses pray'd, Apollo heard his prayer: And now the Greeks their hecatomb prepare; Between their horns the falted barley threw, 600 And with their heads to heaven the victims flew: The limbs they fever from th' inclosing hide; The thighs, selected to the Gods, divide: On these, in double cawls involv'd with art, The choicest morfels lay from every part. The priest himself before his altar stands, And burns the offering with his holy hands, Pours the black wine, and fees the flames aspire; The youth with instruments furround the fire: The thighs thus facrific'd, and entrails dreft, 610 Th' affistants part, transfix, and roast the rest: Then spread the tables, the repast prepare, Each takes his feat, and each receives his share. When now the rage of hunger was repreft, With pure libations they conclude the feaft; 615 The youths with wine the copious goblets crown'd, And pleas'd, dispense the flowing bowls around. With hymns divine the joyous banquet ends,

The Pæans lengthen'd till the fun descends:

The

57

590

The Greeks, reftor'd, the grateful notes prolong; 620

Apollo listens, and approves the fong.

'Twas night; the chiefs befide their veffel lie, Till rofy morn had purpled o'er the fky: Then launch, and hoise the mast; indulgent gales, Supply'd by Phœbus, fill the swelling fails; 625 The milk-white canvas bellying as they blow, The parted ocean foams and roars below: Above the bounding billows swift they flew, Till now the Grecian camp appear'd in view. 630 Far on the beach they haul their bark to land, (The crooked keel divides the yellow fand) Then part, where firetch'd along the winding bay The ships and tents in mingled prospect lay. But raging fill, amidft his navy lat

The stern Achilles, stedfast in his hate; Nor mix'd in combat, nor in council join'd; But wasting cares lay heavy on his mind: In his black thoughts revenge and flaughter roll,

And scenes of blood rife dreadful in his foul.

Twelve days were past, and now the dawning light The Gods had fummon'd to th' Olympian height: Jove first ascending from the watery bowers, Leads the long order of æthereal powers. When like the morning mift in early day, Rose from the flood the daughter of the sea; 645 And to the feats divine her flight addrest. There, far apart, and high above the rest, The thunderer fat; where old Olympus shrouds His hundred heads in heaven, and props the clouds. Suppliant Suppliant the Goddess stood: one hand she plac'd 650 Beneath his beard, and one his knees embrac'd. If e'er, O father of the Gods! she said, My words could please thee, or my actions aid; Some marks of honour on my son bestow, And pay in glory what in life you owe.

653 Fame is at least by heavenly promise due
To life so short, and now dishonour'd too.

Avenge this wrong, oh ever just and wise!

Let Greece be humbled, and the Trojans rise;
Till the proud king, and all th' Achaian race,
Shall heap with honours him they now disgrace.

Thus Thetis spoke, but Jove in silence held
The sacred councils of his breast conceal'd.
Not so repuls'd, the Goddess closer prest,
Still grasp'd his knees, and urg'd the dear request. 665
O sire of gods and men! thy suppliant hear;
Refuse, or grant; for what has Jove to fear?
Or, oh! declare, of all the powers above,
Is wretched Thetis least the care of Jove?
She said, and sighing thus the God replies,

Who rolls the thunder o'er the vaulted skies.

What hast thou ask'd? Ah why should Jove engage
In foreign contests, and domestic rage,
The Gods complaints, and Juno's sierce alarms,
While I, too partial, aid the Trojan arms?

675
Go, lest the haughty partner of my sway
With jealous eyes thy close access survey;
But part in peace, secure thy prayer is sped:
Witness the facred honours of our head,

The

But thou, nor they, shall search the thoughts that roll 710 Deep in the close recesses of my soul.

Full on the fire the Goddess of the skies
Roll'd the large orbs of her majestic eyes,
And thus return'd. Austere Saturnius, say,
From whence this wrath, or who controls thy sway 715
Thy boundless will, for me, remains in force,
And all thy councils take the destin'd course.
But 'tis for Greece I fear: for late was seen
In close consult the silver-stooted queen.
Jove to his Thetis nothing could deny, 720
Nor was the signal vain that shook the sky.
What fatal savour has the Goddess won,
To grace her sierce, inexorable son?
Perhaps in Grecian blood to drench the plain,
And glut his vengeance with my people slain. 725

Then thus the God: Oh restless fate of pride.

That strives to learn what heaven resolves to hide;

Vain is the search, presumptuous and abhorr'd,

Anxious to thee, and odious to thy lord.

Let this suffice; th' immutable decree

No force can shake: what is, that ought to be.

Goddess submit, nor dare our will withstand,

But dread the power of this avenging hand;

Th' united strength of all the Gods above

In vain resists th' omnipotence of Jove.

The Thunderer spoke, nor durst the queen reply; A reverend horror silenc'd all the sky. The feast disturb'd, with sorrow Vulcan saw His Mother menac'd, and the Gods in awe;

Peace

Peace at his heart, and pleasure his design, 740
Thus interpos'd the architect divine.
The wretched quarrels of the mortal state
Are far unworthy, Gods! of your debate:
Let men their days in senseless strife employ,
We, in eternal peace, and constant joy. 745
Thou Goddess-mother; with our sire comply,
Nor break the facred union of the sky;
Lest, rouz'd to rage, he shake the blest abodes,
Launch the red lightning, and dethrone the Gods.
If you submit, the Thunderer stands appeas'd;
The gracious power is willing to be pleas'd.

Thus Vulcan spoke; and rising with a bound,
The double bowl with sparkling nectar crown'd,
Which held to Juno in a chearful way,
Goddess (he cried) be patient and obey.

755
Dear as you are, if Jove his arm extend,
I can but grieve, unable to defend.
What God so daring in your aid to move,
Or lift his hand against the force of Jove?
Once in your cause I felt his matchless might,
Tost all the day in rapid circles round;
Nor till the sun descended, touch'd the ground:
Breathless I fell, in giddy motion lost;
The Sinthians rais'd me on the Lemnian coast.

He faid, and to her hands the goblet heav'd
Which, with a smile, the white-arm'd queen receiv'd.
Then to the rest he fill'd; and in his turn,
Each to his lips apply'd the nectar'd urn,

Vulcan

ILIAD, BOOK I

Vulcan with aukward grace his office plies, And unextinguish'd laughter shakes the skies.

Thus the bleft Gods the genial day prolong, In feafts ambrofial, and celeftial fong. Apollo tun'd the lyre; the Muses round With voice alternate aid the silver sound. Mean time the radiant sun, to mortal sight Descending swift, roll'd down the rapid light. Then to their starry domes the Gods depart, The shining monuments of Vulcan's art: Jove on his couch reclin'd his awful head, And Juno slumber'd on the golden bed.

63

770

775

780

THE

But I would in the total I . there is a serieg pole of home traveler that early The second settle and resident by the contract by the first total state and the property and the state of t have a see hours able 4 sky get feet a not check The same than the state of the weekers a state of the The same of the same and the Base and amid make Take which have a few or the chart factors and the Then to their languations it of the depart to a large and the state of t and the state of t • A three was a second of the 1)

THE

SECOND BOOK

OFTHE

I L I A D.

Vol. I.

F

THE ARGUMENT.

The Trial of the Army and Catalogue of the Forces.

JUPITER, in pursuance of the request of Thetis, sends a deceitful vision to Agamemnon, persuading him to lead the army to battle; in order to make the Greeks fenfible of their want of Achilles. The general, who is deluded with the hopes of taking Troy without his affiftance, but fears the army was discouraged by his absence and the late plague, as well as by the length of time, contrives to make trial of their difposition by a stratagem. He first communicates his defign to the princes in council, that he would propose a return to the soldiers, and that they should put a stop to them if the proposal was embraced. he affembles the whole hoft, and upon moving for a return to Greece, they unanimously agree to it, and They are detained by the run to prepare the ships. management of Ulysses, who chastises the insolence of Thersites. The affembly is recalled, several speeches made on the occasion, and at length the advice of Neftor followed, which was to make a general muster of the troops, and to divide them into their feveral nations, before they proceeded to battle. This gives occasion to the poet to enumerate all the forces of the Greeks and Trojans, and in a large catalogue.

The time employed in this book confilts not entirely of one day. The scene lies in the Grecian camp and upon the sea-shore; toward the end it removes to Troy.

-A

D

THE

I L I A D.

BOOK II.

TOW pleasing sleep had seal'd each mortal eye, Stretch'd in the tents the Grecian leaders lie, Th' immortals flumber'd on their thrones above; All, but the ever-wakeful eyes of Jove. To honour Thetis' fon he bends his care, And plunge the Greeks in all the woes of war: Then bids an empty phantom rife to fight, And thus commands the Vision of the night. Fly hence, deluding Dream! and light as air, To Agamemnon's ample tent repair. IQ Bid him in arms draw forth th' embattled train, Lead all his Grecians to the dufty plain. Declare, ev'n now 'tis given him to destroy The lofty towers of wide-extended Troy. For now no more the Gods with fate contend, 15 At Juno's suit the heavenly factions end. Destruction hangs o'er you devoted wall, And nodding Ilion waits th' impending fall. Swift as the word the vain illusion fled, Descends, and hovers o'er Atrides' head; 20 Cloath'd in the figure of the Pilian fage, Renown'd for wisdom, and rever'd for age;

Around

f

S

it

Around his temples spreads his golden wing, And thus the flattering dream deceives the king. Canst thou, with all a monarch's cares opprest, Oh Atreus' fon ! canst thou indulge thy rest? Ill fits a chief who mighty nations guides, Directs in council, and in war prefides, To whom its fafety a whole people owes, To waste long nights in indolent repose. 30 Monarch, awake! 'tis Jove's command I bear, Thou, and thy glory, claim his heavenly care. In just array draw forth th' embattle'd train, Lead all thy Grecians to the dusty plain; Ev'n now, O king! 'tis given thee to destroy 3.5 The lofty towers of wide-extended Troy. For now no more the Gods with fate contend, At Juno's fuit the heavenly factions end. Destruction hangs o'er yon' devoted wall, And nodding Ilion waits th' impending fall. 40 Awake, but waking this advice approve, And trust the vision that descends from Jove. The phantom faid; then vanish'd from his fight,

Refolves to air, and mixes with the night.

A thousand schemes the monarch's mind employ; 45
Elate in thought, he sacks untaken Troy:

Vain as he was, and to the future blind;

Nor saw what Jove and secret fate design'd,

What mighty toils to either host remain,

What scenes of grief, and numbers of the slain! 50
Eager he rises, and in fancy hears

The voice celestial murmuring in his ears.

First

I

D

1

T

N

T

In

In just array draw forth th' embattled train, And lead the Grecians to the dufty plain; Ev'n now, Oking! 'tis given thee to destroy The lofty towers of wide-extended Troy. For now no more the Gods with fate contend, At Juno's fuit the heavenly factions end. Deftruction hangs o'er you devoted wall, And nodding Ilion waits th' impending fall. This hear observant, and the gods obey! The vision spoke, and past in air away. Now, valiant chiefs! fince heaven itself alarms; Unite, and rouze the fons of Greece to arms. But first with caution try what yet they dare, Worn with nine years of unfuccefsful war? To move the troops to measure back the main, Be mine; and yours the province to detain.

He spoke, and sat; when Nestor rising said, (Nestor, whom Pylos' sandy realms obey'd) Princes of Greece, your faithful ears incline, Nor doubt the vision of the powers divine; Sent by great Jove to him who rules the host, Forbid it heaven! this warning should be lost! Then let us haste, obey the God's alarms, And join to rouze the sons of Greece to arms.

Thus spoke the sage: the kings without delay Dissolve the council, and their chief obey:
The sceptred rulers lead; the following host
Pour'd forth by thousands, darkens all the coast. 110
As from some rocky eleft the shepherd sees Clustering in heaps on heaps the driving bees,

Rolling

85

95

100

105

A

H

0

ILIAD, Book II.

Rolling, and blackening, fwarms fucceeding fwarms, With deeper murmurs and more hoarse alarms; Dusky they spread, a close embody'd croud, 115 And o'er the vale descends the living cloud. So, from the tents and ships, a lengthening train Spreads all the beach, and wide o'ershades the plain: Along the region runs a deafening found; Beneath their footsteps groans the trembling ground. Fame flies before, the messenger of Jove, And shining soars, and claps her wings above. Nine facred heralds now, proclaiming loud The monarch's will, suspend the listening croud. Soon as the throngs in order rang'd appear, And fainter murmurs dy'd upon the ear, The King of Kings his awful figure rais'd; High in his hand the golden sceptre blaz'd: The golden sceptre, of celestial frame, By Vulcan form'd, from Jove to Hermes came: To Pelops he th' immortal gift refign'd; Th' immortal gift great Pelops left behind, In Atreus' hand, which not with Atreus ends, To rich Thyestes next the prize descends; And now the mark of Agamemnon's reign, 135 Subjects all Argos, and controls the main.

On this bright sceptre now the king reclin'd. And artful thus pronounc'd the speech design'd, Ye fons of Mars! partake your leader's care, Heroes of Greece, and brothers of the war! Of partial Jove with justice I complain, And heavenly oracles believ'd in vain.

5

0

A fafe

A fafe return was promis'd to our toils, Renown'd, triumphant, and enrich'd with spoils. Now shameful flight alone can fave the host, Our blood, our treafure, and our glory loft. So Jove decrees, refiftless lord of all! At whose command whole empires rise or fall: He shakes the feeble props of human trust, And towns and armies humbles to the dust: What shame to Greece a fruitless war to wage, Oh lasting shame in every future age! Once great in arms, the common fcorn we grow, Repuls'd and baffled by a feeble foe. So fmall their number, that if wars were ceas'd, And Greece triumphant held a general feaft, All rank'd by tens; whole decads when they dine Must want a Trojan slave to pour the wine. But other forces have our hopes o'erthrown, And Troy prevails by armies not her own. 160 Now nine long years of mighty Jove are run, Since first the labours of this war begun: Our cordage torn, decay'd our vessels lie, And fcarce enfure the wretched power to fly. Hafie then, for ever leave the Trojan wall! 165 Our weeping wives, our tender children call: Love, duty, fafety, fummon us away, 'Tis nature's voice, and nature we obey. Our shatter'd barks may yet transport us o'er, Safe and inglorious, to our native shore. 170 Fly, Grecians, fly, your fails and oars employ, And dream no more of heaven-defended Troy. His

His deep defign unknown, the hofts approve Atrides' fpeech. The mighty numbers move. So-roll the billows to th' Icarian shore, From East and South when winds begin to roar, Burst their dark mansions in the clouds, and sweep The whitening furface of the ruffled deep. And as on corn when western gusts descend, Before the blaft the lofty harvests bend: . 180 Thus o'er the field the moving hoft appears, With nodding plumes and foves of waving spears. The gathering murmur spreads, their trampling feet Beat the loofe fands, and thicken to the fleet. With long-refounding cries they urge the train To fit the ships; and launch into the main. They toil, they fweat, thick clouds of dust arise, The doubling clamours echo to the skies. Ev'n then the Greeks had left the hostile plain, And fate decreed the fall of Troy in vain; 1190 But Jove's imperial queen their flight furvey'd, And fighing thus befpoke the blue-ey'd maid.

Shall then the Grecians fly! O dire difgrace!

And leave unpunish'd this perfidious race?

Shall Troy, shall Priam, and th' adulterous spouse,

In peace enjoy the fruits of broken vows?

And bravest chiefs, in Helen's quarrel slain,

Lie unreveng'd on you detested plain?

No: let my Greeks, unmov'd by vain alarms,

Once more refulgent shine in brazen arms.

Passed the flying host detain.

Nor let one sail be hoisted on the main,

Pallas

Pallas obeys, and from Olympus' height! Swift to the ships precipitates her flight; Ulysses, first in public cares, she found, 205 For prudent counsel like the Gods renown'd: Oppress'd with generous grief the hero stood, Nor drew his fable veffels to the flood. And is it thus, divine Laertes' fon! Thus fly the Greeks (the martial maid begun) Thus to their country bear their own difgrace, And fame eternal leave to Priam's race? Shall beauteous Helen still remain unfreed, Still unreyeng'd, a thousand heroes bleed? Hafte, generous Ithacus! prevent the shame, 215 Recall your armies, and your chiefs reclaim. Your own reliftless eloquence employ, And to th' immortals trust the fall of Troy. The voice divine confess'd the warlike maid, Ulysses heard, nor uninspir'd obey'd: Then meeting first Atrides, from his hand Receiv'd th' imperial sceptre of command. Thus graced, attention and respect to gain, He runs, he flies through all the Grecian train, Each prince of name, or chief in arms approv'd, He fir'd with praise, or with persuasion mov'd. Warriours like you, with strength and wisdom blest, By brave examples should confirm the rest. The monarch's will not yet reveal'd appears; He tries our courage, but refents our fears. 230 Th' unwary Greeks his fury may provoke;

Not thus the king in fecret council spoke.

Jove

His

Jove loves our chief, from Jove his honour springs, Beware! for dreadful is the wrath of kings.

But if a clamorous vile plebeian rose,

Him with reproof he check'd, or tam'd with blows.

Be still, thou slave, and to thy betters yield;

Unknown alike in council and in field!

Ye Gods, what dastards would our host command?

Swept to the war, the lumber of a land.

240

Be silent, wretch, and think not here allow'd

That worst of tyrants, an usurping croud.

To one sole monarch Jove commits the sway;

His are the laws, and him let all obey.

With words like these the troops Ulysses rul'd, 245 The loudest filenc'd, and the fiercest cool'd. Back to th' affembly roll the thronging train, Defert the ships, and pour upon the plain. Murmuring they move, as when old Ocean roars, And heaves huge jurges to the trembling shores: 250 The groaning banks are burst with bellowing found, The rocks remurmur, and the deeps rebound. At length the tumult finks, the noises cease, And a still filence lulls the camp to peace. Therfites only clamour'd in the throng. Loquacious, loud, and turbulent of tongue: Aw'd by no shame, by no respect control'd, In fcandal bufy, in reproaches bold: With witty malice studious to defame; Scorn all his joy, and laughter all his aim. 260 But chief he glory'd with licentious stile, To lash the great, and monarchs to revile.

His figure such as might his soul proclaim;
One eye was blinking, and one leg was lame:
His mountain-shoulders half his breast o'erspread, 265
Thin hairs bestrew'd his long mis-shapen head.
Spleen to mankind his envious heart possest,
And much he hated all, but most the best.
Ulysses or Achilles still his theme;
But royal scandal his delight supreme.
Long had he liv'd the scorn of every Greek,
Vext when he spoke, yet still they heard him speak.
Sharp was his voice; which, in the shrillest tone,
Thus with injurious taunts attack'd the throne.

Amidst the glories of so brighten reign, 275 What moves the great Atrides to complain? 'Tis thine whate'er the warriour's breaft inflames, The golden spoil, and thine the lovely dames. With all the wealth our wars and blood bestow, Thy tents are crouded, and thy chefts o'erflow. 280 Thus at full ease in heaps of riches roll'd, What grieves the monarch? Is it thirst of gold? Say, shall we march with our unconquer'd powers, (The Greeks and I) to Ilion's hostile towers, And bring the race of royal baftards here, For Troy to ranfom at a price too dear? But fafer plunder thy own host supplies; Say, would'ft thou feize some valiant leader's prize? Or, if thy heart to generous love be led? Some captive fair, to bless thy kingly bed? Whate'er our master craves, submit we must, Plagued with his pride, or punish'd for his lust.

Oh

I

Oh women of Achaia! men no more!

Hence let us fly, and let him waste his store
In loves and pleasures on the Phrygian shore.

We may be wanted on some busy day,
When Hector comes: so great Achilles may:
From him he forc'd the prize we jointly gave,
From him, the sierce, the fearless, and the brave:
And durst he, as he ought, resent that wrong,
This mighty tyrant were no tyrant long.
Fierce from his seat at this Ulysses springs,
In generous vengeance of the king of kings.
With indignation sparkling in his eyes,
He views the wretch, and sternly thus replies.

305

Peace, factious monster, born to vex the state, With wrangling talents form'd for foul debate: Curb that impetuous tongue, nor, rashly vain And fingly mad, asperse the sovereign reign. Have wenot known theee, flave! of all our hoft, 310 The man who acts the leaft, upbraids the most? Think not the Greeks to shameful flight to bring, Nor let those lips profane the name of king. For our return we trust the heavenly powers; Be that their care; to fight like men be ours. But grant the host with wealth the general load, Except detrastion, what hast thou bestow'd? Suppose some hero should his spoils resign, Art thou that hero, could those spoils be thine? Gods! let me perish on this hateful shore, And let these eyes behold my son no more; If, on thy next offence, this hand forbear To strip those arms thou ill deserv'it to wear,

Expel

Expel the council where our princes meet, And fend thee fcourg'd and howling through the fleet, 325

He faid, and cowering as the dastard bends, The weighty sceptre on his back descends: On the round bunch the bloody tumours rife; The tears spring starting from his haggard eyes : Trembling he fat, and shrunk in abject fears, 330 From his vile vifage wip'd the scalding tears. While to his neighbour each express'd his thought: Ye Gods! what wonders has Ulysses wrought! What fruits his conduct and his courage yield; Great in the council, glorious in the field! 335 Generous he rifes in the crown's defence, To curb the factious tongue of insolence. Such just examples on offenders shown, Sedition filence, and affert the throne.

'Twas thus the general voice the hero prais'd,
Who, rising, high th' imperial sceptre rais'd:
The blue-ey'd Pallas, his celestial friend,
(In form a herald) bade the crouds attend.
Th' expecting crouds in still attention hung,
To hear the wisdom of his heavenly tongue.
Then deeply thoughtful, pausing ere he spoke,
His silence thus the prudent hero broke.

Unhappy monarch! whom the Grecian race, With shame deserting, heap with vile disgrace. Not such at Argos was their generous vow, Once all their voice, but ah! forgotten now: Ne'er to return, was then the common cry, Till Troy's proud structures should in asses lie.

Behold

345

350

Se

0

5

0

d

Behold them weeping for their native shore! What could their wives or helpless children more? 355 What heart but melts to leave the tender train. And, one short month, endure the wintry main? Few leagues remov'd, we wish our peaceful feat, When the ship tosses, and the tempests beat: Then well may this long stay provoke their tears, 360 The tedious length of nine revolving years. Not for their grief the Grecian host I blame; But vanquish'de baffled! oh eternal shame! Expect the time to Troy's destruction given, And try the faith of Chalcas and of heaven. 365 What pass'd at Aulis, Greece can witness bear, And all who live to breathe this Phrygian air. Befide a fountain's facred brink we rais'd Our verdant altars, and the victims blaz'd; (Twas where the plane-tree spread its shades around) The altars heav'd; and from the crumbling ground A mighty dragon thot, of dire portent; From Jove himself the dreadful fign was fent. Straight to the tree his fanguine spires he roll'd, And curl'd around in many a winding fold. The topmost branch a mother-bird possest; Eight callow infants fill'd the mosfy nest; Herfelf the ninth; the ferpent as he hung, Stretch'd his black jaws, and crash'd the crying young; While hovering near, with miferable moan, The drooping mother wail'd her children gone. The mother fast as round the nest she flew, Seiz'd by the beating wing, the monster slew:

Nor

Nor long surviv'd; to marble turn'd, he stands 385 A lafting prodigy on Aulis' fands. Such was the will of Jove; and hence we dare Trust in his omen, and support the war. For while around we gaze with wondering eyes, And trembling fought the powers with facrifice, Full of his God, the reverend Chalcas cried, 390 Ye Grecian warriours! lay your fears aside. This wondrous fignal Jove himself displays, Of long, long labours, but eternal praise. As many birds as by the fnake were flain, So many years the toils of Greece remain; But wait the tenth, for Ilion's fall decreed : Thus spoke the prophet, thus the fates succeed. Obey, ye Grecians! with submission wait, Nor let your flight avert the Trojan fate.

He faid: the shores with loud applauses sound, 400
The hollow ships each deafening shout rebound.
Then Nestor thus—These vain debates forbear,
Ye talk like children, not like heroes dare.
Where now are all your high resolves at last?
Your leagues concluded, your engagements past? 405
Vow'd with libations and with victims then,
Now vanish'd like their smoke: the faith of men!
While useless words consume th' unactive hours,
No wonder Troy so long resists our powers.
Rise, great Atrides! and with courage sway;
We march to war if thou direct the way.
But leave the few that dare resist thy laws,
The mean deserters of the Grecian cause,

To

I

I

B

Such

To grudge the conquests mighty Jove prepares, And view with envy our fuccessful wars. On that great day when first the martial train, Big with the fate of Ilion, plow'd the main; Jove, on the right, a prosperous signal sent, And thunder rolling shook the firmament. Encourag'd hence, maintain the glorious strife, Till every foldier grasp & Phrygian wife, Till Helen's woes at full reveng'd appear, And Troy's proud matrons render tear for tear. Before that day, if any Greek invite His country's troops to base, inglorious flight; Stand forth that Greek! and hoist his fail to fly, And die the dastard first, who dreads to die. But now, O monarch! all thy chiefs advise: Nor what they offer, thou thyfelf despise. Among those councils, let not mine be vain; In tribes and nations to divide thy train; His feparate troops let every leader call, Each strengthen each, and all encourage all: What chief, or foldier, of the numerous band, Or bravely fights, or ill obeys command, When thus distinct they war, shall soon be known, And what the cause of Ilion not o'er-thrown; If fate relifts, or if our arms are flow, If Gods above prevent, or men below. To him the king: How much thy years excel 440 In arts of council, and in fpeaking well! 0 would the Gods, in love to Greece, decree But ten fuch fages as they grant in thee;

5

Ó

10

VOL. I.

Such wisdom soon should Priam's force destroy. And foon should fall the haughty towers of Troy! 445 But Jove forbids, who plunges those he hates In fierce contention and in vain debates. Now great Achilles from our aid withdraws, By me provok'd; a captive maid the cause: If e'er as friends we join, the Trojan wall Must shake, and heavy will the vengeance fall! But now, ye warriours, take a short repast; And well-refresh'd, to bloody conflict haste. His sharpened spear let every Grecian wield, And every Grecian fix his brazen shield; Let all excite the fiery fleeds of war, And all for combat fit the rattling car. This day, this dreadful day, let each contend; No rest, no respite, till the shades descend; Till darknefs, or till death, shall cover all: Let the war bleed, and let the mighty fall! Till bath'd in fweat be every manly breaft, With the huge shield each brawny arm deprest, Each aching nerve refuse the lance to throw, And each fpent courfer at the chariot blow. 465 Who dares, inglorious, in his ships to stay, Who dares to tremble on this fignal day; That wretch, too mean to fall by martial power, The birds shall mangle, and the dogs devour.

The monarch spoke; and straight a murmur rose, Loud as the surges when the tempest blows, That dash'd on broken rocks tumultuous roar, And foam and thunder on the stony shore.

Straight

B

In

Gr

Th

Pre

Th

Th

ILIAD, Book II. Straight to the tents the troops difperfing bend, The fires are kindled, and the fmokes afcend; 475 With hasty feasts they facrifice and pray T' avert the dangers of the doubtful day. A fleer of five years' age, large limb'd, and fed, To Jove's high altars Agamemnon led: There bade the noblest of the Grecian peers; 480 And Nestor first, as most advanc'd in years. Next came Idomeneus, and Tydeus' fon, Ajax the lefs, and Ajax Telamon; Then wife Ulysses in his rank was plac'd; And Menelaus came unbid, the laft. The chiefs furround the destin'd beast, and take The facred offering of the falted cake: When thus the king prefers his folemn prayer, Oh thou! whose thunder rends the clouded air, Who in the heaven of heavens has fix'd thy throne, Supreme of Gods! unbounded and alone! Hear! and before the burning fun descends, Before the night her gloomy veil extends, Low in the dust be laid you hostile spires, Be Priam's palace funk in Grecian fires, 495 In Hector's breast be plung'd this shining sword, And flaughter'd heroes groan around their lord! Thus pray'd the chief: his unavailing prayer Great Jove refus'd, and tost in empty air: The God averse, while yet the fumes arose, 500 Prepar'd new toils, and doubled woes on woes. Their prayers perform'd, the chiefs the rite pursue, The barley fprinkled, and the victim flew.

54

ght

The limbs they fever from th' inclosing hide,
The thighs, selected to the Gods, divide.
On these, in double cauls involv'd with art,
The choicest morsels lie from every part.
From the cleft wood the crackling stames aspire,
While the fat victim feeds the facred fire.
The thighs thus facrific'd, and entrails drest,
Th' affistants part, transfix, and roast the rest;
Then spread the tables, the repast prepare,
Each takes his seat, and each receives his share.
Soon as the rage of hunger was supprest,
The generous Nestor thus the prince address.

Now bid thy heralds found the loud alarms, And call the fquadrons fleath'd in brazen arms: Now feize th' occasion, now the troops survey, And lead to war when heaven directs the way.

He said; the monarch issued his commands; 520
Straight the loud heralds call the gathering bands.
The chiefs inclose their king; the host divide,
In tribes and nations rank'd on either side.
High in the midst the blue-ey'd Virgin slies;
From rank to rank she darts her ardent eyes: 525
The dreadful ægis, Jove's immortal shield,
Blaz'd on her arm, and lightened all the field:
Round the vast orb an hundred serpents roll'd,
Form'd the bright fringe, and seem'd to burn in gold.
With this each Grecian's manly breast she warms, 530
Swells their bold hearts, and strings their nervous arms;
No more they sigh, inglorious to return,
But breath revenge, and for the combat burn.

As

7

F

T

S

In

E

In

N

C

As on some mountain, through the lofty grove, The crackling flames afcend, and blaze above; 535 The fires expanding as the winds arife, Shoot their long beams, and kindle half the fkies: So from the polish'd arms, and brazen shields, A gleamy splendour flash'd along the fields. Not less their number than th' embody'd cranes, Or milk-white fwans in Asius' watery plains, That o'er the windings of Cayster's springs, Stretch their long necks, and clap their ruftling wings, Now yower aloft, and courfe in airy rounds; Now light with noise; with noise the field resounds. Thus numerous and confus'd, extending wide, The legions croud Scamander's flowery fide; With rushing troops the plains are cover'd o'er, And thundering footsteps shake the founding shore. Along the river's level meads they stand, Thick as in fpring the flowers adorn the land, Or leaves the trees; or thick as infects play, The wandering nation of a fummer's day, That, drawn by milky steams, at evening hours, In gather'd Iwarms furround the rural bowers; 555 From pail to pail with bufy murmur run The gilded legions, glittering in the fun. So throng'd, so close, the Grecian squadrons stood In adiant arms, and thirst for Trojan blood. Each leader now his scatter'd force conjoins, 560 In close array, and forms the deepening lines. Not with more eafe, the skilful shepherd swain Collects his flocks from thousands on the plain. The

The King of Kings; majestically tall,
Towers o'er his armies, and outshines them all: 565
Like some proud bull that round the pastures leads
His subject-herds, the monarch of the meads.
Great as the Gods, th' exalted chief was seen,
His strength like Neptune, and like Mars his mien,
Jove o'er his eyes celestial glories spread,
And dawning conquest play'd around his head.

Say, Virgins, seated round the throne divine,
All-knowing Goddesse! immortal Nine!
Since earth's wide regions, heaven's unmeasur'd height,
And hells abyse, hide nothing from your sight,
(We, wretched mortals! lost in doubts below,
But guess by rumour, and but boast we know)
Oh say what heroes, fir'd by thirst of same,
Or urg'd by wrongs, to Troy's destruction came?
To count them all, demands a thousand tongues, 580
A throat of brass and adamantine lungs.
Daughters of Jove, assist! inspir'd by you
The mighty labour dauntless I pursue:
What crouded armies, from what climes they bring,
Their names, their numbers, and their chiefs, I sing.

THE CATALOGUE OF THE SHIPS.

THE hardy warriours whom Bootia bred, Penclius, Leitus, Protheënor led: With these Arcesilaus and Clonius stand, Equal in arms, and equal in command. These head the troops that rocky Aulis yields, And Eteon's hills, and Hyrie's watery fields,

And

590

75

80

ıg.

From those rich regions where Cephiffus leads His filver current through the flowery meads; From Panopëa, Chryfa the divine, Where Anemoria's stately turrets shine, Where Pytho, Daulis, Cypariffus stood, And fair Lilæa views the rifing flood. These rang'd in order on the floating tide, Close, on the left, the bold Bœotians side. Fierce Ajax led the Locrian squadrons on, Ajax the less, O'leus' valiant son; Skill'd to direct the flying dart aright; Swift in pursuit, and active in the fight. Him, as their chief, the chosen troops attend, Which Bessa, Thronus, and rich Cynos fend 1 635 Opus, Calliarus, and Scarphe's bands; And those who dwell where pleasing Augia stands, And where Boagrius floats the lowly lands, ·Or in fair Tarphe's fylvan feats refide; In forty vessels cut the liquid tide. 640 Eubœa next her martial fons prepares, And fends the brave Abantes to the wars: · Breathing revenge, in arms they take their way From Chalcis' walls, and strong Eretria; Th' Isteian fields for generous vines renown'd, . The fair Cariftos, and the Styrian ground; Where Dios from her towers o'erlooks the plain, And high Cerinthus views the neighbouring main. Down their broad shoulders falls a length of hair; Their hands dismiss not the long lance in air; But with portended spears in fighting fields, Pierce the tough corfelets and the brazen shields.

Twice

Twice twenty ships transport the warlike bands, Which bold Elphenor, sierce in arms, commands.

Full fifty more from Athens stem the main, Led by Menestheus through the liquid plain, (Athens the fair, where great Eroctheus fway'd, That ow'd his nurture to the blue-eyed maid, But from the teeming furrow took his birth, The mighty offspring of the foodful earth. Him Pallas plac'd amidst her wealthy fane, Ador'd with facrifice and oxen flain; Where, as the years revolve, her alters blaze, And all the tribes refound the Goddess' praise) No chief like thee, Menestheus! Greece could yield, To marshal armies in the dusty field, Th' extended wings of battle to display, Or close th' embody'd host in firm array. Nestor alone, improv'd by length of days, For martial conduct bore an equal praise.

With these appear the Salaminian bands, Whom the gigantic Telamon commands; In twelve black ships to Troy they steer their course, And with the great Athenians join their force.

Next move to war the generous Argive train,
From high Træzene, and Maseta's plain,
And fair Ægina circled by the main:
Whom strong Tyrinthe's lofty walls surround,
And Epidaur with viny harvests crown'd;
And where fair Asinen and Hermion show
Their cliffs above, and ample bay below.
These by the brave Euryalus were led,
Great Sthenelus, and greater Diomed,

But

But chief Tydides bore the fovereign fway; In fourfcore barks they plow the watery way.

The proud Mycene arms her martial powers, Cleone, Corinth, with imperial towers, Fair Aræthyrea, Ornia's fruitful plain, And Ægion, and Adrastus' ancient reign; And those who dwell along the sandy shore, And where Pellene yields her sleecy store, Where Helice and Hyperesia lie, And'Gonoëssa's spires salute the sky.

Great Agamemnon rules the numerous band, A hundred vessels in long order stand, 69 And crouded nations wait his dread command. High on the deck the king of men appears, And his refulgent arms in triumph wears; 'Proud of his host, unrival'd in his reign,

In filent pomp he moves along the main.

His brother follows, and to vengeance warms. The hardy Spartans exercis'd in arms;

Phares and Bryfia's valiant troops, and those Whom Lacedæmon's lofty hills inclose:

Or Messe's towers for filver doves renown'd, Amyclæ, Laäs, Augia's happy ground,

And those whom Oetylos' low walls contain,

And Helos, on the margin of the main:

These, o'er the bending ocean, Helen's cause,

In fixty ships with Menelaus draws:

Eager and loud from man to man he slies,

Revenge and fury slaming in his eyes;

While, vainly fond, in fancy oft he hears

The fair-one's grief, and sees her falling tears.

In

690

700

ILIAD, BOOK II. In ninety fail, from Pylo's fandy coast, Nettor the fage conducts his chosen host: From Amphigenia's ever fruitful land; Where Æpy high, and little Pteleon stand; Where beauteous Arene her structures shows, And Thryon's walls Alpheus' streams inclose: 720 And Dorion, fam'd for Thamyris difgrace, Superiour once of all the tuneful race, Till, vain of mortals empty praife, he strove To match the feed of cloud-compelling Jove! Too daring bard! whose unsuccessful pride Th' immortal Muses in their art defy'd. Th' avenging Muses of the light of day Depriv'd his eyes, and fnatch'd his voice away; No more his heavenly voice was heard to fing, His hand no more awak'd the filver string. Where under high Gyllene, crown'd with wood, The shaded tomb of old Æpytus stood; From Ripè, Stratie, Tegea's bordering towns, The Phenean fields, and Orchomenian downs, Where the fat herds in plenteous pasture rove; And Stymphelus with her furrounding grove, Parrhasia, on her snowy cliffs reclin'd, And high Enispe shook by wintry wind, And fair Mantinea's ever-pleafing fite; In fixty fail th' Arcadian bands unite. Bold Agapenor, glorious at their head, (Ancœus' fon) the mighty squadron led. . Their ships, supply'd by Agamemnon's care,

Through roaring feas the wondering warriours bear;

The

The first to battle on th' appointed plain, But new to all the dangers of the main.

745

750

755

76e

Those, where fair Elis and Buprasium join; Whom Hyrmin, here, and Myrsinus confine, And bounded there, where o'er the valleys rose I h' Olenian rock; and where Alisium slows; Beneath four chiefs (a numerous army) came: The strength and glory of th' Epean name. In separate squadrons these their train divide, Each leads ten vessels through the yielding tide. One was Amphimachus, and Thalpius one; (Eurytus' this, and that Teatus' son) Diores sprung from Amarynceus' line; And great Polyxenus, of sorce divine.

But those who view fair Elis o'er the seas
From the blest islands of th' Echinades,
In forty vessels under Meges move,
Begot by Phyleus the belov'd of Jove.
To strong Dulichium from his sire he sed,
And thence to Troy his hardy warriours led.

765

Ulyffes follow'd through the watery road,
A chief, in wifdom equal to a God.
With those whom Cephalenia's isle inclos'd,
Or till their fields along the coast oppos'd;
Or where fair Ithaca o'erlooks the floods,
Where high Neritos shakes his waving woods,
Where Ægilipa's rugged sides are seen,
Crocylia rocky, and Zacynthus green.
These in twelve galleys with vermilion prores,
Eeneath his conduct, sought the Phrygian shores.

Thoas.

Thoas came next, Andramon's valiant fon,
From Pleuron's walls, and chalky Calydon,
And rough Pylene, and th' Olenian steep,
And Chalcis beaten by the rolling deep.
He led the warriours from th' Ætolian shore,
For now the sons of Oeneus were no more!
The glories of the mighty race were sted!
Oeneus himself, and Meleager dead!
To Thoas' care now trust the martial train,
His forty vessels follow through the main.

Next eighty barks the Cretan king commands, 785 Of Gnossus, Lyctus, and Gortyna's bands, And those who dwell where Rhytion's domes arise, Or white Lycastus glitters to the skies, Or where by Phæstus silver Jardan runs; Crete's hundred cities pour forth all her sons.

These march'd, Idomeneus, beneath thy care, And Merion, dreadful as the God of war.

Tlepolemus, the fon of Hercules,
Led nine swift vessels through the soamy seas;
From Rhodes with everlasting sunshine bright,
Jelyssus, Lindus, and Camirus white.
His captive mother serce Alcides bore,
From Ephyr's walls, and Selle's winding shore,
Where mighty towns in ruins spread the plain,
And saw their blooming warriours early slain.
The hero, when to manly years he grew,
Alcides' uncle, old Licymnius, slew;
For this, constrain'd to quit his native place,
And shun the vengeance of th' Herculean race,

A fleet

800

A fleet he built, and with a numerous train
Of willing exiles, wander'd o'er the main;
Where, many seas and many sufferings past,
On happy Rhodes the chief arriv'd at last:
There in three tribes divides his native band,
And rules them peaceful in a foreign land;
Encreas'd and prosper'd in their new abodes,
By mighty Jove, the sire of men and Gods;
With joy they saw the growing empire rise,
And showers of wealth descending from the skies.

Three ships with Nireus sought the Trojan shore, Nireus, whom Agläe to Charopus bore, Nireus, in faultless shape and blooming grace, The loveliest youth of all the Grecian race; Pelides only match'd his early charms; But sew his troops, and small his strength in arms. 820

Next thirty galleys cleave the liquid plain,
Of those Calydnæ's sea-girt isles contain;
With them the youth of Nisyrus repair,
Casus the strong, and Crapathus the fair;
Cos, where Eurypylus possess the sway,
Till great Alcides made the realms obey:
These Antiphus and bold Phidippus bring,
Sprung from the God by Thessalus the king.

Now, Muse, recount Pelasgic Argos' powers, From Alos, Alope, and Trechin's towers; From Phthia's spacious vales; and Hella, blest With semale beauty far beyond the rest. Full sifty ships beneath Achilles' care, The Achaians, Myrmidons, Hellenians bear;

210

825

830

Y

I

Theffalians

Where

870

875

880

-895 Thy

Where Phære hears the neighbouring waters fall,
Or proud Iölcus lifts her airy wall,
In ten black ships edbark'd for Ilion's shore,
With bold Eumelus, whom Alceste bore;
All Pelias' race Alceste far outshin'd,
The grace and glory of the beauteous kind.

The troops Methone or Thaumacia yields,
Olizon's rocks, or Melibæa's fields,

With Philoctetes fail'd, whose matchless art,
From the tough bow directs the feather'd dart.
Seven were his ships; each vessel fifty row,
Skill'd in his science of the dart and bow.
But he lay raging on the Lemnian ground,

A poisonous Hydra gave the burning wound;

There groan'd the chief in agonizing pain,

8

Whom Greece at length shall wish, nor wish in vain.

His forces Medon led from Lemnos' shore,
Oïleus' son, whom beauteous Rhena bore.

Th' Oechalian race, in those high towers contain'd,
Where once Eurytus in proud triumph reign'd, 885
Or where her humbler turrets Tricca rears,
Or where Ithomè, rough with rocks, appears;
In thirty fail the sparkling waves divide,
Which Podalirius and Machaon guide.
To these his skill their * Parent-God imparts, 890
Divine professors of the healing arts.

The bold Ormenian and Asterian bands In forty barks Eurypylus commands, Where Titan hides his hoary head in snow, And where Hyperia's silver fountains slow.

culapius

* Æfculapius.

Thy troops, Argissa, Polypeetes leads,
And Eleon, shelter'd by Olympus' stades,
Gyrtone's warriours; and where Orthe lies,
And Oleosson's chalky cliffs arise.

Sprung from Pirithous of immortal race,
The fruit of fair Hippodame's embrace,
(That day, when hurl'd from Pelion's cloudy head,
To distant dens the shaggy Centaurs sled)
With Polypeetes join'd in equal sway
Leontes leads, and forty ships obey.

In twenty sail the bold Perrhæbians came
From Cyphus; Guneus was their leader's name.

From Cyphus; Guneus was their leader's name.
With these the Enians join'd, and those who freeze
Where cold Dodona lifts her holy trees;
Or where the pleasing Titaresius glides,
And into Peneus rolls his easy tides;
Yet o'er the silver surface pure they slow,
The sacred stream unmix'd with streams below,
Sacred and awful! From the dark abodes
Styx pours them forth, the dreadful oath of Gods!

Last under Prothous the Magnesians stood,
Prothous the swift, of old Tenthredon's blood;
Who dwell where Pelion, crown'd with piny boughs,
Obscures the glade, and nods his shaggy brows;
Or where through flowery Tempé Peneus stray'd, 920
(The region stretch'd beneath his mighty shade)
In forty sable barks they stemm'd the main;
Such were the chiefs, and such the Grecian train.

90

95

hy.

Say next, O Muse! of all Achaia breeds,
Who bravest fought, or rein'd the noblest steeds? 925
Vol. I. Eumelus's

Eumelus' mares were foremost in the chace, As eagles fleet, and of Pheretian race; Bred where Pieria's fruitful fountains flow, And train'd by him who bears the filver bow. Fierce in the fight their nostrils breath'd a flame. 970 Their height, their colour, and their age the same; O'er fields of death they whirl the rapid car, And break the ranks, and thunder through the war. Ajax in arms the first renown acquired, While Itern Achilles in his wrath retir'd (His was the strength that mortal might exceeds, And his, th' unrival'd race of heavenly steeds). But Thetis' fon now thines in arms no more; His troops, neglected on the fandy shore, In empty air their sportive javelins throw, Or whirf the difk, or bend an idle bow : "Unstain'd with blood his cover'd chariots stand? Th' immortal courfers graze along the strand; But the brave chiefs th' inglorious life deplor'd, And wandering o'er the camp, requir'd their lord. 945

Now, like a deluge, covering all around, The shining armies swept along the ground; Swift as a flood of fire, when storms arise, Floats the wide field, and blazes to the skies. Earth grean'd beneath them; as when angry Jove, 900 Hurls down the forky light'ning from above, On Arime when he the thunder throws, And fires Typhæus with redoubled blows, Where Typhon, prest beneath the burning load, Still feels the fury of th' avenging God.

But

I

T

T

Na

Me

Th

Am

Ari

(Th

Tho

But various Iris, Jove's commands to bear,
Speeds on the wings of winds through liquid air;
In Priam's porch the Trojan chiefs the found,
The old confulting, and the youths around.
Polites' shape, the monarch's son, she chose,
Who from Æstetes' tomb observ'd the foes,
High on the mound; from whence in prospect lay
The fields, the tents, the navy, and the bay.
In this dissembled form, she hastes to bring.
Th' unwelcome message to the Phrygian king.

965

Cease to consult, the time for action calls,
War, horrid war, approaches to your walls!
Assembled armies oft have I beheld;
But ne'er till now such numbers charg'd a field.
Thick as autumnal leaves or driving sand,
The moving squadrons blacken all the strand.
Thou, godlike Hector! all thy force employ,
Assemble all th' united bands of Troy;
In just array let every leader call
The foreign troops: this day demands them all.

The voice divine the mighty chief alarms;
The council breaks, the warriours rush to arms.
The gates unfolding pour forth all their train,
Nations on nations fill the dusky plain.
Men, steeds, and chariots, shake the trembling ground;
The tumult thickens, and the skies resound.
Amidst the plain in sight of Ilion stands.
A rising mount, the work of human hands;
(This for Myrinhe's tomb th' immortals know, Though call'd Bateïa in the world below)

Beneath .

H 2

ut

Beneath their chiefs in martial order here, Th' auxiliar troops and Trojan hofts appear.

The godlike Hector, high above the rest, Shakes his huge spear, and nods his plumy crest: In throngs around his native bands repair, And groves of lances glitter in the air.

Divine Æneas brings the Dardan race, Anchies' fon by Venus' stolen embrace, Born in the shades of Ida's secret grove, (A mortal mixing with the Queen of Love) Archilochus and Acamas divide

The warriour's toils, and combat by his fide.

Who fair Zeleia's wealthy valleys till, Fast by the foot of Ida's facred hill; Or drink, Æsepus, of thy sable flood: Were led by Pandarus, of royal blood. To whom his art Apollo deign'd to show, Grac'd with the presents of his shafts and bow.

From rich Apæfus and Adreftia's towers,

High Teree's fummits, and Pityea's bowers;

From these the congregated troops obey

Young Amphius and Adrastus' equal sway:

Old Merops' sons; whom, skill'd in fates to come,

The sire forewarn'd, and prophesy'd their doom:

Fate urged them on! the sire forewarn'd in vain, 1010

They rush to war, and perish'd on the plain.

From Practius' stream, Percote's pasture lands, And Sestos and Abydos' neighbouring strands, From great Arisba's walls and Selle's coast, Asius Hyrtacides conducts his host;

1015 High A

Re

Fr

Th

High on his car he shakes the flowing reins, His siery coursers thunder o'er the plains.

The fierce Pelasgi next, in war renown'd, March from Larissa's ever-fertile ground: In equal arms their brother leaders shine, Hippothous bold, and Pyleus the divine.

1020

Next Acamus and Pyrous lead their hofts, In dread array, from Thracia's wintery coasts; Round the bleak realms where Hellespontus roars, And Boreas beats the hoarse-resounding shores. 1025

With great Euphemus the Ciconians move, Sprung from Trazenian Ceus, loved by Jove.

Pyræchmus the Pæonian troops attend,
Skill'd in the fight, their crooked bows to bend;
From Axius' ample bed he leads them on,
Axius, that laves the distant Amydon.
Axius, that swells with all his neighouring rills,
And wide around the floating region fills.

The Paphlagonians Pylomenes rules,
Where rich Henetia breeds her favage mules,
Where Erythinus' rifing clifts are feen,
Thy groves of box, Cytorus! ever green;
And where Ægyalus and Cromna lie,
And lofty Sefamus invades the fky;
And where Parthenius, roll'd through banks of flowers,
Reflects her bordering palaces and bowers.

Here march'd in arms the Halizonian band, Whom Odius and Epistrophus command, From those far regions where the sun refines The sipening silver in Alybean mines.

1045

H 3

There,

ois ligh

010

There, mighty Chromis led the Mystam train, And augur Ennomus, inspir'd in vain, For stern Achilles lopt his sacred head, Roll'd down Scamander with the vulgar dead.

Phoreis and brave Ascanius here unite 'Th' Ascanian Phrygians, eager for the fight.

Of those who round Mæonia's realms reside, Or whom the vales in shades of Tmolus hide, Mestles and Antiphus the charge partake; Born on the banks of Gyges' filent lake, There, from the fields where wild Maander flows, High Mycale, and Natmos' shady brows, And proud Miletes, came the Carian throngs, With mingled clamours, and with barbarous tongues, Amphimacus and Naustes guide the train, Naustes the bold, Amphimachus the vain, Who, trick'd with gold, and glittering on his car, Rode like a woman to the field of war, Fool that he was! by fierce Achilles flain, The river swept him to the briny main : There whelm'd with waves the gaudy warriour lies; The valiant victor seiz'll the golden prize.

The forces last in fair array succeed,
Which blameless Glaucus and Sarpedon lead;
The warlike bands that distant Lycia yields,
Where gulphy Xanthus foams along the fields.

THE

THE

been steelessable to better

THIRD BOOK

OF THE

of an order of convey this question of the committee

dr an americanal vi graad add by Ar an a

L · I A D.

THE ARGUMENT.

The Duel of Menelaus and Paris.

The Armies being ready to engage, a fingle combat is agreed upon between Menelaus and Paris (by the intervention of Hector) for the determination of the war. Iris is fent to call Helena to behold the fight. She leads her to the walls of Troy, where Priam fat with his counfellors, observing the Grecian leaders on the plain below, to whom Helen gives an account of the chief of them. The kings on either part take the folemn oath for the conditions of the combat. The duel enfuse, wherein Paris being overcome, is snatched away in a cloud by Venus, and transported to his apartment. She then calls Helen from the walls, and brings the lovers together. Agamemnon, on the part of the Grecians, demands the restoration of Helen, and the performance of the articles.

The three and twentieth day still continues throughout this book. The scene is sometimes in the Fields before Troy, and fometimes in Troy itself.

Rager of fight, and bai and command;

New front to front the half he ample flood

When, to We vary before the fere of fame

Flow if o'er his armour with an eafy pride,

Two pointed (pears he thook with galling grace

I Line A Del out modW

BOOK III.

THUS by their leader's care each martial band! Moyes into ranks, and stretches o'er the land. With shouts the Trojans rushing from afar, Proclaim their motions, and provoke the war: So when inclement winter vox the plain With piercing frofts, or thick-defcending rain, To warmer feas, the Cranes embodied fly, With noise, and order, through the mid-way fley; To pigmy nations wounds and death they bring, And all the war descends upon the wing. But filent, breathing rage, refolv'd and fkill'd By mutual aids to fix a doubtful field, Swift march the Greeks: the rapid dust around Darkening arifes from the labour'd ground? Thus from his flaggy wings when Notes flieds 25 A night of vapours round the mountain-heads, Swift-gliding mifts the dufky fields invade, To thieves more grateful than the midnight fliade; While scarce the swains their feeding flocks furvey, Loft and confus'd amidft the thicken'd day : So wrapt in gathering dust, the Grecian train, Atmoving cloud, fwept on, and hid the plain. Now

Now front to front the hostile armies stand.

Eager of fight, and only wait command;

When, to the van, before the sons of same

Whom Troy sent forth, the beauteous Paris came,

In form a God! the panther's speckled hide

Flow'd o'er his armour with an easy pride,

His bended bow across his shoulders slung,

His sword beside him negligently hung,

Two pointed spears he shook with gallant grace,

And dar'd the bravest of the Grecian race.

B

I

V

Sa

T

TI

TI

Ti

Or

Soc

Th

Th

Th

Bea

Wh

As thus, with glorious air and proud disdain, He boldly stalk'd, the foremost on the plain, Him Menelaus, lov'd of Mars, espies, With heart elated, and with joyful eyes : So joys a lion, if the branching deer, Or mountain goat, his bulky prize, appear; Eager he seizes and devours the slain, Prest by bold youths, and baying dogs in vain. Thus fond of vengeance, with a furious bound, In clanging arms he leaps upon the ground From his high chariot : him, approaching near, The beauteous champion views with marks of fear; Smit with a conscious sense, retires behind, And shuns the fate he well deferv'd to find. As when some shepherd, from the rustling trees Shot forth to view, a scaly serpent sees; Trembling and pale, he starts with wild affright, And all confus'd precipitates his flight: So from the king the shining warriour flies, And plung'd amid the thickest Trojans lies.

Q.

10

ILIAD, Book IN.

As God-like Hector fees the prince retreat, He thus upbraids him with a generous heat. Unhappy Paris! but to women brave! 55 So fairly form'd, and only to deceive! Oh hadft thou died when first thou faw'ft the light, Or died at least before thy nuptial rite! A better fate than vainly thus to boaft, And fly, the scandal of thy Trojan hoft. Gods! how the fcornful Greeks exult to fee Their fears of danger undeceiv'd in thee! Thy figure promis'd with a martial air, But ill thy foul supplies a form so fair. In former days, in all thy gallant pride When thy tall ships triumphant stemm'd the tide, When Greece beheld thy painted canvas flow, And crouds stood wondering at the passing show; Say, was it thus, with fuch a baffled mien, You met th' approaches of the Spartan queen, Thus from her realm convey'd the beauteous prize, And * both her warlike lords-outshin'd in Helen's eyes ? This deed, thy foes delight, thy own difgrace, Thy father's grief, and ruin of thy race; This deed recalls thee to the proffer'd fight; Or hast thou injur'd whom thou dar'ft not right? Soon to thy coft the field would make thee know Thou keep'ft the confort of a braver foe. Thy graceful form instilling foft defire, Thy curling treffes, and thy filver lyre, Beauty and youth; in vain to these you trust, When youth and beauty shall be laid in dust:

* Thefeus and Mene'aus,

Troy yet may wake, and one avenging blow Crush the dire author of his country's woe.

His filence here, with blufhes, Paris breaks; 85 Tis just, my brother, what your anger speaks: But who like thee can boast a foul sedate, So firmly proof to all the thocks of fate? Thy force like steel a temper'd hardness shows, Still edg'd to wound, and ftill untir'd with blows. 90 Like steel, uplifted by some strenuous swain, With falling woods to frow the wasted plain. Thy gifts I praise; nor thou despise the charms With which a lover golden Venus arms; Soft moving speech, and pleasing outward show, No wish can gain them, but the Gods bestow. Yet, wouldn't thou have the proffer'd combat stand, The Greeks and Trojans feat on either hand; Then let a mid-way space our hosts divide, And, on that stage of war, the cause be try'd: 100 By Paris there the Spartan king be fought, For beauteous Helen and the wealth fhe brought: And who his rival can in arms fubdue, His be the fair, and his the treasure too. Thus with a lafting league your toils may ceafe, 105 And Troy possess her fertile fields in peace; Thus may the Greeks review their native shore, Much fam'd for generous steeds, for beauty more.

The challenge Hector heard with joy, Then with his spear restrain'd the youth of Troy, Held by the midft, athwart; and near the foe

Advanc'd with steps majestically flow:

wile Thefers ned Megerans.

While round his dauntless head the Grecians pour Their stones and arrows in a mingled shower.

Then thus the monarch great Atrides cry'd; ins.
Forbear, ye warriours! lay the darts afide:
A parley Hector asks, a message bears,
We know him by the various plume he wears.
Aw'd by his high command the Greeks attend,
The tumult silence, and the fight suspend.

While from the center Hector rolls his eyes
On either hoft, and thus to both applies.
Hear, all ye Trojans, all ye Grecian bands!
What Paris, author of the war, demands.
Your shining swords within the sheath restrain,
And pitch your lances in the yielding plain.
Here in the midst, in either army's fight,
He dares the Spartan king to single fight;
And wills, that Helen and the ravish'd spoil
That caus'd the contest, shall reward the toil.
Let these the brave triumphant victor grace,
And differing nations part in leagues of peace.

He spoke: in still suspense on either side Each army stood: the Spartan chief reply'd.

Me too ye warriours hear, whose fatal right A world engages in the toils of fight.

To me the labour of the field resign;
Me Paris injur'd; all the war be mine.

Fall he that must, beneath his rival's arms;
And live the rest, secure of suture harms.

Two lambs, devoted by your country's rite,
To Earth a sable, to the Sun a white, 14

Prepare

Prepare ye Trojans! while a third we bring Select to Jove, th' inviolable king.

Let reverend Priam in the truce engage,
And add the fanction of confiderate age;
His fons are faithless, headlong in debate,
And youth itself an empty wavering state:
Cool age advances venerably wise,
Turns on all hands its deep-discerning eyes;
Sees what befel, and what may yet befall,
Concludes from both, and best provides for all.

The nations hear, with rifing hopes possess, And peaceful prospects dawn in every breast. Within the lines they drew their steeds around, And from their chariots issued on the ground: Next all unbuckling the rich mail they wore, Lay'd their bright arms along the sable shore. On either side the meeting hosts are seen With lances six'd, and close the space between. Two heralds now dispatch'd to Troy, invite The Phrygian monarch to the peaceful rite; Talthybius hastens to the sleet, to bring The lamb for Jove, th' inviolable king.

Mean time, to beauteous Helen, from the skies 165
The various Goddess of the rain-bow slies
(Like fair Laodice in form and face,
The leveliest nymph of Priam's royal race).
Here the palace, at her loom she found;
The golden web her own sad story crown'd. 170
The Trojan wars she weav'd (herself the prize)
And the dire triumphs of her fatal eyes.

To

160

To whom the Goddess of the painted bow;
Approach, and view the wondrons scene below!
Each hardy Greek, and valiant Trojan knight,
So dreadful late, and furious for the fight,
Now rest their spears, or lean upon their shields;
Ceas'd is the war, and silent all the fields.
Paris alone and Sparta's king advance,
In single fight to tost the beamy lance;
Each met in arms, the sate of combatteries,
Thy love the motive, and thy charms the prize.

This faid, the many-colour'd maid inspires
Her husband's love, and wakes her former fires;
Her country, parents, all that once were dear,
Rush to her thought, and force a tender tear.
O'er her fair face a snowy veil the threw,
And, softly sighing, from the loom withdrew:
Her handmaids Clymene and Æthra wait
Her silent footsteps to the Scæan gate.

There sat the seniors of the Trojan race,

(Old Priam's chiefs, and most in Priam's grace)

The king the first; Thymcetes at his side;

Lampus and Clytius, long in council try'd;

Panthus, and Hicetaon, once the strong;

And next, the wisest of the reverend throng,

Antenor grave, and sage Ucalegon,

Lean'd on the walls, and bask'd before the sun.

Chiefs, who no more in bloody sights engage,

But wise through time, and narrative with age,

In summer-days like grashoppers rejoice,

A bloodless race, that send a seeble voice.

Thefe,

These when the Spartan queen approach'd the tower, In fecret own'd refiftless beauty's power: They cried, No wonder, fuch celeftial charms 205 For nine long years have fet the world in arms; What winning graces ! what majestic mien! She moves a Goddess, and she looks a Queen! Yet hence, oh heaven! convey that fatal face, And from destruction fave the Trojan race. 218

The good old Priam welcom'd her, and cried, Approach, my child, and grace thy father's fide. See on the plain the Grecian spouse appears, The friends and kindred of thy former years. No crime of thine our present fufferings draws, Not thou, but heaven's disposing will, the cause; The Gods these armies and this force employ, The hostile Gods conspire the fate of Troy. But lift thy eyes, and fay, What Greek is he (Far as from hence these aged orbs can see) Around whose brow such martial graces shine, So tall, fo awful, and almost divine? Though some of larger stature tread the green, None match his grandeur and exalted mien : He feems a monarch, and his country's pride. Thus ceas'd the king, and thus the fair replied.

Before thy prefence, father, I appear With confcious shame and reverential fear, Ah! had I died, ere to these walls I fled, False to my country, and my nuptial bed; My brothers, friends, and daughter left behind, False to them all, to Paris only kind !

For

215

B

A

B T

No

Fr TH

An

Hay

Vo

For this I mourn, till grief or dire disease
Shall waste the form whose crime it was to please.
The king of kings, Atrides, you survey,
Great in the war, and great in arts of sway:
My brother once, before my days of shame;
And oh! that still he bore a brother's name!

With wonder Priam view'd the God-like man,
Extoll'd the happy prince, and thus began.

O bleft Atrides! born to prosperous fate,
Successful monarch of a mighty state!
How vast thy empire! Of you matchless train
What numbers lost, what numbers yet remain?
In Phrygia once were gallant armies known,
In ancient time, when Otreus fill'd the throne,
When God-like Mygdon led their troops of horse,
And I, to join them, rais'd the Trojan force:
Against the manlike Amazons we stood,
And Sangar's stream ran purple with their blood.

250.
But far inferior those, in martial grace
And strength of numbers, to this Grecian race.

This faid, once more he view'd the warriour-train:
What's he, whose arms lie scatter'd on the plain;
Broad is his breast, his shoulders larger spread, 255
Though great Atrides overtops his head.
Nor yet appear his care and conduct small;
From rank to rank he moves, and orders all.
The stately ram thus measures o'er the ground,
And, master of the slock, surveys them round.

Then Helen thus. Whom your discerning eyes.
Have singled out, is Ithacus the wife:

Vol. I.

A bar

10

A barren island boasts his glorious birth : His fame for wisdom fills the spacious earth. Antenor took the word, and thus began : 265 Myfelf, O king! have feen that wondrous man: When trufting Jove and hospitable laws, To Troy he came, to plead the Grecian cause; (Great Menelaus urg'd the fame request) My house was honour'd with each royal guest : 270 I knew their persons, and admir'd their parts, Both brave in arms, and both approv'd in arts. Erect, the Spartan most engag'd our view; Ulysses seated greater reverence drew. When Atreus' fon harangu'd the listening train, Just was his sense, and his expression plain, His words fuccinct, yet full, without a fault; He spoke no more than just the thing he ought. But when Ulysses rose, in thought profound, His modest eyes he fix'd upon the ground, . 280 As one unskill'd or dumb, he seem'd to stand, Nor rais'd his head, nor stretch his scepter'd hand; But, when he speaks, what elocution flows! Soft as the fleeces of descending fnows, The copious accents fall, with easy art; 285 Melting they fall, and fink into the heart! Wondering we hear, and fix'd in deep furprize; Our ears refute the censure of our eyes,

The king then ask'd (as yet the camp he view'd)
What chief is that, with giant strength endued, 290
Whose brawny shoulders, and whose swelling chest,
And losty stature, far exceed the rest?

Ajax

Ajax the great (the beauteous queen replied) Himself a host : the Grecian strength and pride. See! bold Idomeneus Superior towers Amidit you circle of his Cretan powers; Great as a God! I faw him once before, With Menelaus, on the Spartan shore. The reft I know, and could in order name; All valiant chiefs, and men of mighty fame. 300 Yet two are wanting of the numerous train, Whom long my eyes have fought, but fought in vain: Castor and Pollux, first in martial force, One bold on foot, and one renown'd for horse. My brothers these; the same our native shore, 305 One house contain'd us, as one mother bore. Perhaps the chiefs, from warlike toils at eafe, For distant Troy refus'd to sail the seas: Perhaps their fwords fome nobler quarrel draws, Asham'd to combat in their fister's cause. So spoke the fair, nor knew her brothers' doon,

So spoke the fair, nor knew her brothers' doon, Wrapt in the cold embraces of the tomb;
Adorn'd with honours in their native shore,
Silent they slept, and heard of wars no more.

Meantime the heralds, through the crouded town,
Bring the rich wine and destin'd victims down:
Idæus' arms the golden goblets prest,
Who thus the venerable king addrest.
Arise, O father of the Trojan state!
The nations call, thy joyful people wait.
To seal the truce, and end the dire debate.
Paris thy son, and Sparta's king advance,
In measur'd lists to toss the weighty lance;

And

And who his rival shall in arms subdue,

His be the dame, and his the treasure too.

Thus with a lasting league our toils may cease,

And Troy possess her fertile fields in peace;

So shall the Greeks review their native shore,

Much fam'd for generous steeds, for beauty more.

With grief he heard, and bade the chiefs prepare To join his milk-white coursers to the car: He mounts the feat, Antenor at his fide; The gentle fleeds through Scaa's gates they guide: Next from the car descending on the plain, Amid the Grecian hoft and Trojan train 335. Slow they proceed: the fage Ulysses then Arose, and with him rose the king of men. On either fide a facred herald flands, The wine they mix, aud on each monarch's hands Pour the full urn; then draws the Grecian lord 340 His cutlace sheath'd beside his ponderous sword; From the fign'd victims crops the curling hair, The heralds part it, and the princes share; Then loudly thus before th' attentive bands He calls the Gods, and spreads his lifted hands. 345

O first and greatest power! whom all obey,
Who high on Ida's holy mountain sway,
Eternal Jove! and you bright orb that roll
From east to west, and view from pole to pole!
Thou mother Earth! and all ye living Floods!
Infernal Furies, and Tartarian Gods,
Who rule the dead, and horrid woes prepare
For perjur'd kings, and all who falsely swear!

somet with the rest of the writer will be

Hear,

ILIAD, Book III.	1 11
Hear, and be witness, If by Paris slain,
Great Menelaus press the fatal plain;	355
The dame and freasures let the Trojan keep,	Part and
And Greece returning plow the watery deep.
If by my brother's lance the Trojan bleed;
Be his the wealth and beauteous dame decreed :
Th' appointed fine let Ilion justly pay,	360
And every age record the fignal day.
Thus if the Phrygians shall refuse to yield,
Arms must revenge, and Mars decide the field.	•
With that the chief the tender victims flew,
And in the dust their bleeding bodies threw:	365
The vital spirit issued at the wound,	3~3
And left the members quivering on the ground.
From the fame urn they drink the mingled wine,
And add libations to the powers divine.
While thus their prayers united mount the sky;	Age.
	370
Hear, mighty Jove! and hear, ye Gods on high
And may their blood, who first the league confou	na,
Shed like this wine, distain the thirsty ground;
May all their conforts ferve promiscuous lust,
And all their race be scatter'd as the dust!	375
Thus either host their imprecations join'd,	and
Which Jove refus'd, and mingled with the wind.	PARE
The rites now finish'd, reverend Priam rose,
And thus express'd a heart o'ercharg'd with woes.
Ye Greeks and Trojans, let the chiefs engage,	380
But spare the weakness of my feeble age:
In yonder walls that object let me shun,	162
Nor view the danger of fo dear a fon.
• X3 \ W	hofe

.

Whose arms shall conquer, and what prince shall fast, Heaven only knows, for heaven disposes all. 385

This faid, the hoary king no longer stay'd, But on his car the slaughter'd victims laid; Then seiz'd the reins his gentle steeds to guide, And drove to Troy, Antenor at his side.

Bold Hector and Ulysses now dispose
The lists of combat, and the ground inclose;
Next to decide by sacred lots prepare,
Who sirst shall launch his pointed spear in air.
The people pray with elevated hands,
And words like these are heard through all the bands.
Immortal Jove, high heaven's superiour lord,
On losty Ida's holy mount ador'd!
Whoe'er involv'd us in this dire debate,
Oh give that author of the war to fate
And shades eternal! let division cease,
And joyful nations join in leagues of peace.

With eyes averted Hector hastes to turn'
The lots of fight, and shakes the brazen urn.
Then, Paris, thine leap'd forth; by fatal chance
Ordain'd the first to whirl the weighty lance.
Both armies sat the combat to survey,
Beside each chief his azure armour lay,
And round the lists the generous coursers neigh.
The beauteous warriour now arrays for sight,
In gilded arms magnissicently bright:

The purple cuishes class his thighs around,
With flowers adorn'd, with silver buckles bound:
Lycaon's corselet his fair body drest,
Brac'd in, and sitted to his softer breast:

A 13-

A radiant baldric, o'er his shoulder ty'd,
Sustain'd the sword that glitter'd at his side:
His youthful face a polish'd helm o'erspread;
The waving horse-hair nodded on his head;
His sigur'd shield, a shining orb, he takes,
And in his hand a pointed javelin shakes.
With equal speed, and sir'd by equal charms,
The Spartan hero sheaths his limbs in arms.

Now round the lifts th' admiring armies stand,
With javelins fix'd, the Greek and Trojan band.
Amidst the dreadful vale, the chiefs advance,
All pale with rage, and shake the threatening lance.
The Trojan first his shining javelin threw;
Full on Atrides' ringing shield it slew;
Nor pierc'd the brazen orb, but with a bound
Leap'd from the buckler, blunted on the ground.
Atrides then his massy lance prepares,
In act to throw, but first prefers his prayers.

Give me, great Jove! to punish lawless lust,
And lay the Trojan gasping in the dust:
Destroy th' aggressor, aid my righteous cause,
Avenge the breach of hospitable laws,
Let this example future times reclaim,
And guard from wrong fair friendship's holy name.
He said, and pois'd in air the javelin sent,
Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went,
His corfelet pierces, and his garment rends,
And, glancing downward, near his stank descends.
The wary Trojan, bending from the blow,
Eludes the death, and disappoints his foe:

I 4

But

But fierce Atrides wav'd his fword, and ftrook Full on his casque; the crested helmet shook; The brittle steel, unfaithful to his hand, Broke short: the fragments glitter'd on the fand. The raging warriour to the spacious skies Rais'd his upbraiding voice, and angry eyes: 450 Then is it vain in Jove himself to trust? And is it thus the Gods affift the just? When crimes provoke us, heaven fuccess denies; The dart falls harmless, and the faulchion flies. Furious he faid, and toward the Grecian crew 455 (Seiz'd by the creft) th' unhappy warriour drew; Struggling he follow'd, while th' embroider'd thong, That ty'd his helmet, dragg'd the chief along. Then had his ruin crown'd Atrides' joy, But Venus trembled for the prince of Troy: 460 Unfeen the came, and burft the golden band; And left an empty helmet in his hand. The casque, enrag'd, amidst the Greeks he threw; . The Greeks with finiles the polish'd trophy view. Then, as once more he lifts the deadly dart, In thirst of vengeance, at his rival's heart, The Queen of Love her favour'd champion shrouds (For Gods can all things) in a veil of clouds. Rais'd from the field the panting youth the led, And gently laid him on the bridal bed, With pleasing sweets his fainting sense renews, And all the dome perfumes with heavenly dews. Meantime the brighted of the female kind, The matchless Helen, o'er the walls reclin'd;

To

490 .

To her, beset with Trojan beauties, came 475

In borrow'd form * the laughter-loving dame.
(She seem'd an ancient maid, well-skill'd to cull
The snowy sleece, and wind the twisted wool.)
The Goddess softly shook her silken vest,
That shed perfumes, and whispering thus address. 480

Haste, happy nymph! for thee thy Paris calls,
Safe from the fight, in yonder lofty walls,
Fair as a God! with odours round him spread
He lies, and waits thee on the well-known bed:
Not like a warriour parted from the foe,
But some gay dancer in the publick show.

She spoke, and Helen's fecret foul was mov'd; . She fcorn'd the champion, but the man she lov'd. Fair Venus' neck, her eyes that sparkled fire, And breast, reveal'd the Queen of foft desire. Struck with her presence, straight the lively red Forfook her cheek; and, trembling, thus she said. Then is it still thy pleasure to deceive? And woman's frailty always to believe? Say, to new nations must I cross the main, Or carry wars to some foft Asian plain? For whom must Helen break her second vow? What other Paris is thy darling now? Left to Atrides (victor in the strife) An odious conquest, and a captive wife, Hence let me fail: and if thy Paris bear My absence ill, let Venus ease his care. A hand-maid Goddess at his side to wait, Renounce the glories of thy heavenly state,

Be fix'd for ever to the Trojan shore,

His spouse, or slave; and mount the skies no more.

For me, to lawless love no longer led,

I scorn the coward, and detest his bed;

Else should I merit everlasting shame,

And keen reproach, from every Phrygian dame: 520

Ill suits it now the joys of love to know,

Too deep my anguish, and too wild my woe.

Then, thus incens'd, the Puphian queen replies;
Obey the power from whom thy glories rife:
Should Venus leave thee, every charm must fly,
Fade from thy cheek, and languish in thy eye.
Cease to provoke me, lest I make thee more
The world's aversion, than their love before;
Now the bright prize for which mankind engage,
Then the sad victim of the public rage.

520

At this, the fairest of her sex obey'd, And veil'd her brushes in a silken shade; Unseen, and silent, from the train she moves, Led by the Goddess of the Smiles and Loves.

Arriv'd, and enter'd at the palace-gate,
The maids officious round their mistress wait;
Then all dispersing, various tasks attend;
The queen and Goddess to the prince ascend.
Full in her Paris' sight, the Queen of Love
Had plac'd the beauteous progeny of Jove;
Where, as he view'd her charms, she turn'd away
Her glowing eyes, and thus began to say.

Is this the chief, who lost to sense of shame? Late fled the field, and yet survives his same?

Oh

While these to love's delicious rapture yield,
The stern Atrides rages round the field:
So some fell lion, whom the woods obey,
Roars through the desart, and demands his prey.
Paris he seeks, impatient to destroy,
But seeks in vain along the troops of Troy;

Even

Even those had yielded to a foe so brave

The recreant warriour, hateful as the grave.

Then speaking thus, the king of kings arose;

Ye Trojans, Dardans, all our generous foes!

Hear and attest! from heaven with conquest crown'd,

Our brother's arms the just success have found:

570

Be therefore now the Spartan wealth restor'd,

Let Argive Helen own her lawful lord;

Th' appointed fine let Ilion justly pay,

And age to age record this signal day.

He ceas'd; his army's loud applauses rise,

And the long shout runs echoing through the fkics.

Winnerson de Cadana Maria en 1 in the wall to world make any

But toblicing with alder use

albeit werners but an est to the provide authority of the common brongs the dense, and dweller

THE

Le Resado de de Postes and also for Lot Done

FOURTH BOOK

pellerales l'artiques de au arreve al Meretanes, vitores est ventre de l'article de l'article de la companie de person of bridge colors of colors and colors of the colors

I be seene is wholly as us field before I'm d guerdran geldt hydrod i greistigs volk eent ad Tiller om edit ilgegod, edik kent a zil zil zil jood bleek silt Lok om edit ilgegod, edit sojous en en homis jaar lakeysi here are flain on both free and

THE ARGUMENT.

The Breach of the Truce, and the first Battle.

THE Gods deliberate in council concerning the Troian war: they agree upon the continuation of it; and Jupiter sends down Minerva to break the truce. She perswades Pandarus to aim an arrow at Menelaus, who is wounded, but cured by Machaon. In the mean time some of the Trojan troops attack the Greeks. Agamemnon is distinguished in all the parts of a good general; he reviews the troops, and exhorts the leaders, some by praises, and others by reproofs. Nestor is particularly celebrated for his military discipline. The battle joins, and great numbers are slain on both sides.

The same day continues through this, as through the last book (as it does also through the two following, and almost to the end of the seventh book.) The scene is wholly in the field before Troy.

THE

I L I A D.

BOOK IV.

A ND now Olympus' shining gates unfold;
The Gods, with Jove, assume their thrones of gold:

Immortal Hebè, fresh with bloom divine,
The golden goblet crowns with purple wine:
While the full bowls flow round, the powers employ
Their careful eyes on long-contended Troy.

When Jove, dispos'd to tempt Saturnia's spleen, Thus wak'd the fury of his partial queen. Two powers divine the fon of Atreus aid, Imperial Juno, and the martial maid; But high in heaven they fit, and gaze from far, The tame spectators of his deeds of war. Not thus fair Venus helps her favour'd knight, The Queen of Pleasures shares the toils of fight, Each danger wards, and conftant in her care Saves in the moment of the last despair. Her act has rescued Paris' forfeit life, Though great Atrides gain'd the glorious strife. Then fay, ye powers! what fignal iffue waits To crown this deed, and finish all the Fates? 20 Shall heaven by peace the bleeding kingdoms spare, Or rouze the Furies, and awake the war?

Yet, would the Gods for human good provide, Atrides foon might gain his beauteous bride, Still Priam's walls in peaceful honours grow,

And through his gates the crouding nations flow.

Thus while he spoke, the Queen of Heaven enrag'd, And Queen of War in close consult engag'd: Apart they fit, their deep defigns employ, And meditate the future woes of Troy. Though fecret anger swell'd Minerva's breaft, The prudent Goddess yet her wrath supprest; But Juno, impotent of passion, broke Her fullen filence, and with fury spoke.

Shall then, O tyrant of th' æthereal reign ! My schemes, my labours, and my hopes, be vain? Have I, for this, shook Ilion with alarms, Affembled nations, fet two worlds in arms? To fpread the war, I flew from thore to fltore; Th' immortal coursers scarce the labour bore. At length ripe vengeance o'er their heads impends, But Jove himself the faithless race defends : Loth as thou art to punish lawless lust, Not all the Gods are partial and unjust.

The Sire whose thunder shakes the cloudy skies, 45 Sighs from his inmost foul, and thus replies; Oh lafting rancour! oh infatiate hate . To Phrygia's monarch, and the Phrygian state! What high offence has fir'd the wife of Jove, Can wretched mortals harm the powers above? That Troy and Troy's whole race thou wouldst confound.

And you fair structures level with the ground?

Hafte,

30

Hafte, leave the fkies, fulfil thy ftern defire, Burst all her gates, and wrap her walls in fire! Let Priam bleed! if yet thou thirst for more, Bleed all his fons, and Ilion float with gore, To boundless vengeance the wide realm be given, Till vast destruction glut the queen of heaven! So let it be, and Jove his peace enjoy, When heaven no longer hears the name of Troy. But should this arm prepare to wreak our hate On thy lov'd realms, whose guilt demands their fate, Prefume not thou the lifted bolt to flay:. Remember Troy, and give the vengeance way. For know, of all the numerous towns that rife 65 Beneath the rolling fun and farry skies, Which Gods have rais'd, or earth-born men enjoy; None stands fo dear to Jove as facred Troy. No mortals merit more diftinguish'd grace Than god-like Priam, or than Priam's race, 70 Still to our name their hecatombs expire, And altars blaze with unextinguish'd fire.

At this the Goddes roll'd her radiant eyes,
Then on the Thunderer fix'd them, and replies:
Three towns are Juno's on the Grecian plains,
More dear than all th' extended earth contains,
Mycenæ, Argos, and the Spartan wall;
These thou may'st raze, nor I forbid their fall:
'Tis not in me the vengeance to remove;
The crime's sufficient that they share my love.

So
Of power superiour why should I complain?
Resent I may, but must resent in vain.

VQL. I.

K

Vet

Yet some distinction Juno might require,
Sprung with thyself from one celestial sire,
A Goddess born to share the realms above,
And styl'd the consort of the thundering Jove;
Nor thou a wife and sister's right deny;
Let both consent, and both by turns comply;
So shall the Gods our joint decrees obey,
And heaven shall act as we direct the way.
See ready Pallas waits thy high commands,
To raise in arms the Greek and Phrygian bands;
Their sudden friendship by her arts may cease,
And the proud Trojans sirst infringe the peace.

The fire of men and monarch of the sky, Th' advice approv'd, and bade Minerva sty, Dissolve the league, and all her arts employ To make the breach the faithless act of Troy.

Fir'd with the charge, the headlong urg'd her flight,
And that like lightening from Olympus' height. 100
As the red comet, from Saturnius fent
To fright the nations with a dire portent,
(A fatal fign to armies on the plain,
Or trembling failors on the wintery main)
With sweeping glories glides along in air,
And shakes the sparkles from its blazing hair:
Between both armies thus, in open fight,
Shot the bright Goddes in a trail of light.
With eyes erect the gazing hosts admire
The power descending, and the heavens on fire!
The Gods (they exied) the Gods this signal fent,
And fate now labours with some vast event;

Jove

Jove feals the league, or bloodier scenes prepares;

They said, while Pallas through the Trojan throng (In shape a mortal) pass'd disguis'd along.

Like bold Laödocus, her course she bent,

Who from Antenor trac'd his high descent.

Amidst the ranks Lycaön's son she found,

The warlike Pandarus, for strength renown'd;

Whose squadrons, led from black Æsepus' slood,

With slaming shields in martial circle stood.

To him the Goddes: Phrygian! canst thou hear A well-tim'd counsel with a willing ear? What praise were thine, could'st thou direct thy dart, Amidst his triumph, to the Spartan's heart! What gifts from Troy, from Paris would'st thou gain, Thy country's foe, the Grecian glory sain! Then seize th' occasion, dare the mighty deed, Aim at his breast, and may that aim succeed! 130 But first, to speed the shaft, address thy vow. To Lycian Phœbus with the silver bow, And swear the firstlings of thy slock to pay On Zelia's altars, to the God of day.

He heard, and madly at the motion pleas'd,
His polish'd bow with hasty rashness feiz'd.
'Twas form'd of horn, and smooth'd with artful toil,
A mountain goat refign'd the shining spoil,
Who pierc'd long since beneath his arrows bled;
The stately quarry on the cliss lay dead,
And sixteen palms his brow's large honours spread:
The workman join'd, and shap'd the bended horns,
And beaten gold each taper point adorns.

K 2

This,

This, by the Greeks unfeen, the warriouf bends, Screen'd by the shields of his furrounding friends. 145 There meditates the mark; and couching low, Fits the fharp arrow to the well-firing bow. One from a hundred feather'd deaths he chose, Fated to wound, and cause of future woes. Then offers vows with hecatombs to crown Apollo's altars in his native town.

Now with full force the yielding horn he bends, Drawn to an arch, and joins the doubling ends; Close to his breast he strains the nerve below, Till the barb'd point approach the circling bow; Th' impatient weapon whizzes on the wing : Sounds the tough horn, and twangs the quivering ftring.

But thee, Atrides! in that dangerous hour The Gods forget not, nor thy guardian power. Pallas affifts, and (weaken'd in its force) Diverts the weapon from its destin'd course: So from her babe, when slumber seals his eye, The watchful mother wafts th' envenom'd fly. Just where his belt with golden buckles join'd, Where linen folds the double corflet lin'd, She turn'd the shaft, which hissing from above, Pass'd the broad belt, and through the corflet drove; The folds it pierc'd, the plaited linen tore, And raz'd the fkin, and drew the purple gore. As when some stately trappings are decreed To grace a monarch on his bounding steed, A nymph in Carie or Mæonia bred, Stains the pure ivory with a lively red;

With

With equal lustre various colours vie,
The shining whiteness, and the Tyrian dye:
So, great Atrides! show'd thy sacred blood,
As down thy snowy thigh distill'd the streaming flood.
With horror seiz'd, the king of men descry'd
The shaft infix'd, and saw the gushing tide:
Nor less the Spartan fear'd, before he found
The shining barb appear above the wound.
Then, with a sigh, that heav'd his manly breast,
The royal brother thus his grief exprest,
And grasp'd his hand; while all the Greeks around
With answering sighs return'd the plaintive sound.

Oh dear as life! did I for this agree The folemn truce, a fatal truce to thee! Wert thou expos'd to all the hoftile train, To fight for Greece, and conquer to be flain? The race of Trojans in thy ruin join, And faith is fcorn'd by all the perjur'd line. Not thus our vows, confirm'd with wine and gore, Those hands we plighted, and those oaths we swore, Shall all be vain: when heaven's revenge is flow, Jove but prepares to strike the fiercer blow. 195 The day shall come, that great avenging day, Which Troy's proud glories in the dust shall lay. When Priam's powers and Priam's felf shall fall, And one prodigious ruin fwallow all. I see the God, already, from the pole 200 Bare his red arm, and bid the thunder roll; I fee th' Eternal all his fury shed, And shake his ægis o'er their guilty head.

K 3

Such

Such mighty woes on perjur'd princes wait;
But thou, alas! deferv's a happier fate.
Still must I mourn the period of thy days,
And only mourn, without my share of praise?
Depriv'd of thee, the heartless Greeks no more
Shall dream of conquests on the hostile shore;
Troy seiz'd of Helen, and our glory loss,
Thy bones shall moulder on a foreign coast;
While some proud Trojan thus insulting cries,
(And spurns the dust where Menelaus lies)

Such are the trophies Greece from Ilion brings,

" And fuch the conquests of her King of Kings! 215

" Lo his proud vessels scatter'd o'er the main,

"And unreveng'd his mighty brother flain."
Oh! ere that dire difgrace shall blast my fame,
O'erwhelm me, earth! and hide a monarch's shame.

File faid: a leader's and a brother's fears
Possess his soul, which thus the Spartan chears:
Let not thy words the warmth of Greece abate;
The seeble dart is guiltless of my fate:
Stiff with the rich embroider'd work around,
My varied belt repell'd the slying wound.

To whom the king. My brother and my friend,
Thus, always thus, may heaven thy life defend!
Now feek fome skilful hand, whose powerful art
May stanch th' effusion, and extract the dart.
Herald, be swift, and bid Machaon bring
His speedy succour to the Spartan king;
Pierc'd with a winged shaft, (the deed of Troy)
The Grecian's forrow, and the Dardan's joy.

With

With hafty zeal the fwift Talthybius flies; Through the thick files he darts his fearthing eyes, And finds Machaon, where fublime he flands In arms oneircled with his native bands. Then thus: / Machaon, to the king repair, His wounded brother claims thy timely care; Pierc'd by fome Lycian or Dardanian bow, A grief to us, a triumph to the foe.

The heavy tidings griev'd the godlike man; Swift to his fuccour through the ranks he ran: The dauntless king yet standing firm he found, And all the chiefs in deep concern around, ... Where to the steely point the reed was join'd, The shaft he drew, but left the head behind. Straight the broad belt with gay embroidery grac'd, He loos'd; the corflet from his breaft unbrac'd; Then fuck'd the blood and fovereign balm infus'd, Which Chiron gave, and Æsculapius us'd.

While round the prince the Greeks employ their care, The Trojans rush tumultuous to the war; Once more they glitter in refulgent arms,-Once more the fields are fill'd with dire alarms. Nor had you feen the king of men appear Confus'd, unactive, or furpriz'd with fear; But fond of glory with fevere delight, His beating bosom claim'd the rifing fight, No longer with his warlike fleeds he flay'd, 260. Or press'd the car with polish'd brass inlaid: But left Eurymedon the reins to guide; The flery courfers fnorted at his fide. 0.

K 4

On foot through all the martial ranks he moves,
And these encourages, and those reproves.

Brave men! he cries (to such who boldly dare Urge their swift steeds to sace the coming war)
Your ancient valour on the sees approve;
Jove is with Greece, and let us trust in Jove.
'Tis not for us, but guilty Troy to dread,
Whose crimes sit heavy on her perjur'd head;
Her sons and matrons Greece shall lead in chains,
And her dead warriours strow the mournful plains.

Thus with new ardour he the brave inspires;
Or, thus the fearful with reproaches fires.
Shame to your country, scandal of your kind!
Born to the fate ye well deserve to find!
Why stand ye gazing round the dreadful plain,
Prepared for slight, but doom'd to sly in vain?
Confus'd and panting thus, the hunted deer
Falls as he slies, a victim to his fear.
Still must ye wait the foes, and still retire,
Till you tall vessels blaze with Trojan fire?
Or trust ye, Joye a valiant foe shall chace,
To save a trembling, heartless, dastard race?

This faid, he stalk'd with ample strides along,
To Crete's brave monarch and his martial throng;
High at their head he saw the chief appear,
And bold Meriones excite the rear.
At this the king his generous joy exprest,
And class d the warriour to his armed breast.
Divine Idomeneus what thanks we owe
To worth like thine! what praise shall we bestow?

To

To thee the foremost honours are decreed,
First in the fight, and every graceful deed.
For this, in banquets, when the generous bowls
Restore our blood, and raise the warriours souls,
Though all the rest with stated rules we bound,
Unmix'd, unmeasur'd, are thy goblets crown'd.
Be still thyself; in arms a mighty name;
Maintain thy honours, and enlarge thy same.

To whom the Cretan thus his speech addrest;
Secure of me, O king! exhort the rest:
Fix'd to thy side, in every toil I share,
Thy firm associate in the day of war.
But let the signal be this moment given;
To mix in sight is all I ask of heaven.
The sield shall prove how perjuries succeed,
And chains or death avenge their impious deed.

Charm'd with this heat, the king his course pursues,
And next the troops of either Ajax views:
In one firm orb the bands were rang'd around,
A cloud of heroes blacken'd all the ground.
Thus from the lofty promontory's brow
A swain surveys the gathering storm below;
Slow from the main the heavy vapours rise,
Spread in dim streams, and fail along the skies,
Till black as night the swelling tempest shows,
The cloud condensing as the West-wind blows:
He dreads th' impending storm, and drives his slock
To the close covert of an arching rock.

Such, and so thick, the embattled squadrons stood, With spears erect, a moving iron wood;

A fhady light was fhot from glimmering shields, And their brown arms obscur'd the dusky fields.

O heroes! worthy fuch a dauntless train, Whose godlike virtue we but urge in vain, (Exclaim'd the king) who raife your eager bands With great examples, more than loud commands, Ah would the Gods but breathe in all the rest Such fouls as burn in your exalted breaft! Soon should our arms with just success be crown'd, And Troy's proud walls he fmoaking on the ground,

Then to the next the general bends his course (His Heart exults, and glories in his force); There reverend Nefter ranks his Pylian bands, And with inspiring eloquence commands; With strictest order fets his train in arms, The chiefs advices, and the foldiers warms, Alastor, Chromius, Hamon, round him wait," 340 Bias the good, and Pelagon the great. The horse and chariots to the front assign'd, The foot (the strength of war) he rang'd behind; The middle space suspected troops supply, melos'd by both, nor left the power to fly; He gives command to curb the fiery fleed, Nor cause confusion, nor the ranks exceed; Before the rest let none too rashly ride; No strength nor skill, but just in time, be try'd: The charge once made, no warriour turn the rein, But fight, or fall; a firm, embody'd train. He whom the fortune of the field shall cast From forth his charlot, mount the next in hafte;

Nor

Nor feek upractis'd to direct the car,
Content with javelins to provoke the war.

Our great forefathers held this prudent course,
Thus rul'd their ardour, thus preserv'd their force,
By laws like these immortal conquests made,
And earth's proud tyrants low in ashes laid.

So spoke the master of the martial art,
And touch'd with transport great Atrides' heart.
Oh! hadst thou strength to match thy brave defires,
And nerves to second what thy soul inspires!
But wasting years, that wither human race,
Exhaust thy spirits, and thy arms unbrace.
What once thou wert, oh ever might'st thou be!
And age the lot of any chief but thee.

Thus to the experience'd prince Atrides cry'd;
He shook his heavy locks, and thus reply'd.
Well might I wish, could mortal wish renew 370
That strength which once in boiling youth I knew;
Such as I was, when Ereuthalian stain
Beneath this arm fell prostrate on the plain.
But heaven its gifts not all at once bestows,
These years with wisdom crowns, with action those:
The field of combat sits the young and bold,
The solemn council best becomes the old:
To you the glorious consist I resign,
Let sage advice, the palm of age, be mine.
He said. With joy the monarch march'd before.

And found Menestheus on the dusty shore, With whom the firm Athenian phalanx stands; And next Ulystes, with his subject bands.

Remote

Remote their forces lay, nor knew so far
The peace infring'd, nor heard the sounds of war; 385
The tumult late begun, they stood intent
To watch the motion, dubious of th' event.
The king, who saw their squadrons yet unmov'd,
With hasty ardour thus the chiefs reprov'd.

Can Peleus' fon forget a warriour's part,
And fears Ulysses, skill'd in every art?
Why stand you distant, and the rest expect
To mix in combat which yourselves neglect?
From you 'twas hop'd among the first to dare
The shock of armies, and commence the war.
For this your names are call'd, before the rest,
To share the pleasures of the genial feast:
And can you, chiefs! without a blush survey
Whole troops before you labouring in the fray?
Say, is it thus those honours you requite;
The first in banquets, but the last in fight?

Ulysses heard: the hero's warmth o'erspread
His cheek with blushes: and severe, he said:
Take back th' unjust reproach! Behold we stand
Sheath'd in bright arms, and but expect command.
If glorious deeds afford thy soul delight,
406
Behold me plunging in the thickest fight.
Then give thy warriour-chief a warriour's due,
Who dares to act whate'er thou dar'st to view.

Struck with his generous wrath, the king replies;
Oh great in action, and in council wife!
With ours, thy care and ardour are the fame,
Nor need I to command, nor ought to blame.

Sage.

390

395

400

Sage as thou art, and learn'd in human kind,
Forgive the transport of a martial mind.

Haste to the fight, secure of just amends;
The Gods that make, shall keep the worthy, friends.

85

190

95

He faid, and pass'd where great Tydides lay, His steeds and chariots wedg'd in firm array : (The warlike Sthenelus attends his fide) To whom with stern rerpoach the monarch cry'd; Oh fon of Tydeus! (he, whose strength could tame The bounding steed, in arms a mighty name) Canst thou, remote, the mingling hosts descry, With hands unactive, and a careless eye? 425 Not thus thy fire the fierce encounter fear'd; Still first in front the matchless prince appear'd: What glorious toils, what wonders they recite, Who view'd him labouring through the ranks of fight ! I faw him once, when, gathering martial powers, 430 A peaceful guest, he fought Mycenæ's towers; Armies he ask'd, and armies had been given, Not we deny'd, but Jove forbade from heaven; While dreadful comets glaring from afar Forewarn'd the horrours of the Theban war. Next, fent by Greece from where Asopus flows, A fearless envoy, he approached the Topics; Thebe's hostile walls, unguarded and alone, Dauntless he enters, and demands the throne. The tyrant feaffing with his chiefs he found, 440 And dar'd to combat all those chiefs around; Dar'd and fubdued, before their haughty lord; For Pallas strung his arm, and edg'd his sword.

Stung

Stung with the shame, within the winding way, To bar his passage fifty warriours lay; Two heroes led the fecret fquadron on, Mæon the fierce, and hardy Lycophon; Those fifty slaughter'd in the gloomy vale, He spar'd but one to bear the dreadful tale. Such Tydeus was, and fuch his martial fire. Gods! how the fon degenerates from the fire! No words the godlike Diomed return'd, But heard respectful, and in secret burn'd : Not fo fierce Capaneus' undaunted fon, Stern as his fire, the boafter thus begun. What needs, O monarch, this invidious praise, Ourselves to lessen, while our fires you raise? Dare to be just, Atrides! and confess Our valour equal, though our fury lefs. With fewer troops we ftorm'd the Theban wall, And happier faw the sevenfold city fall. In impious acts the guilty fathers dy'd; The fons subdued, for heaven was on their side. Far more than heirs of all our parents fame, Our'glories darken their diminish'd name. 465 To him Tydides thus. My friend, forbear, Suppress thy passion, and the king revere: His high concern may well excuse this rage, Whose cause we follow, and whose war we wage; His the first praise, were Ilian's towers o'erthrown, And, if we fail, the chief difgrace his own, Let him the Greeks to hardy toils excite,

'Tis ours to labour in the glorious fight.

Hq

1

E

T

I

He spoke, and ardent, on the trembling ground Sprung from his car; his ringing arms refound. Dire was the clang, and dreadful from afar, Of arm'd Tydides rushing to the war. As when the winds, ascending by degrees, First-move the whitening furface of the feas, The billows float in order to the shore, The wave behind rolls on the wave before; Till, with the growing storm, the deeps arise, Foam o'er the rocks, and thunder to the Ries. So to the fight the thick battalions throng, Shields urg'd on thields, and men drove men along Sedate and filent move the numerous bands: No found, no whifper, but the chief's commands, Those only heard; with awe the rest obey, As if some God had fnatch'd their voice away. Not fo the Trojans; from their hoft afcends A general shout that all the region rends. As when the fleecy flocks unnumber'd fland In wealthy folds, and wait the milker's hand, The hollow vales inceffant bleating fills, The lambs reply from all the neighbouring hills: 495 Such clamours role from various nations round, Mix'd was the murmur, and confus'd the found. Each hoft now joins, and each a God inspires, These Mars incites, and those Minerva fires. Pale Flight around, and dreadful Terrour reign; 500 And Discord raging bathes the purple plain; Discord! dire fifter of the slaughtering power, Small at her birth, but rising every hour, While

While scarce the skies her horrid head can bound, She stalks on earth, and shakes the world around; The nations bleed, where-e'er her steps she turns; The groan still deepens, and the combat burns.

Now shield with shield, with helmet helmet clos'd,
To armour armour, lance to lance oppos'd,
Host against host with shadowy squadrons drew,
The sounding darts in iron tempests slew,
Victors and vanquish'd join promisedous cries,
And shrilling shouts and dying groans arise;
With streaming blood the slippery fields are dy'd,
And slaughter'd heroes swell the dreadful tide.
As torrents roll, increas'd by numerous rills,
With rage impetuous down their echoing hills;
Rush to the vales, and, pour'd along the plain,
Roar through a thousand channels to the main;
The distant shepherd trembling hears the sound:
So mix both hosts, and so their cries rebound,

The bold Antilochus the flaughter led,
The first who struck a valiant Trojan dead:
At great Echepolus the lance arrives,
Raz'd his high crest, and through his helmet drives;
Warm'd in the brain the brazen weapon lies,
And shades eternal settle o'er his eyes.
So sinks a tower, that long assaults had stood
Of force and fire; its walls besmear'd with blood.
Him, the bold * leader of th' Abantian throng
Seiz'd to despoil, and dragg'd the corpse along:
But while he strove to tug th' inserted dart,
Agenor's javelin reach'd the hero's heart.

His

E

T

St

His flank, unguarded by his ample shield,
Admits the lance: he falls, and spurns the field; 535
The nerves, unbrac'd, support his limbs no more;
The soul comes floating in a tide of gore.
Trojans and Greeks now gather round the slain;
The war renews, the warriours bleed again;
As o'er their prey rapacious wolves engage, 540
Man dies on man, and all is blood and rage.

In blooming youth fair Simoifius fell, Sent by great Ajax to the shades of hell: Fair Simoifius, whom his mother bore, Amid the flocks on filver Simois' shore: The nymph descending from the hills of Ide, To feek her parents on his flowery fide, Brought forth the babe, their common care and joy, And thence from Simois nam'd the lovely boy. Short was his date ! by dreadful Ajax flain He falls, and renders all their cares in vain! . So falls a poplar, that in watery ground Rais'd high the head, with stately branches crown'd, (Fell'd by fome artist with his shining steel, To shape the circle of the bending wheel) 555 Cut down it lies, tall, smooth, and largely spread, With all its beauteous honours on its head; There, left a subject to the wind and rain, And fcorch'd by funs, it withers on the plain ... Thus pierc'd by Ajax, Simoisius lies Stretch'd on the shore, and thus neglected dies.

At Ajax Antiphus his javelin threw;,
The pointed lance with erring fury flew,
And Leucus, lov'd by wife Ulyffes, flew.

Vol. I.

10

In

He drops the corple of Simoifius flain, And finks a breathless carcass on the plain. This faw Ulyfles, and with grief enrag'd Strode where the foremost of the foes engag'd; Arm'd with his spear, he meditates the wound, In act to throw; but, cautious, look'd around. 570 Struck at his fight the Trojans backward drew, And trembling heard the javelin as it flew. A chief stood nigh, who from Abydos came, Old Priam's fon, Democoon was his name; The weapon enter'd close above his ear, Cold through his temples glides the whizzing fpear; With piercing shrieks the youth refigns his breath, His eye-balls darken with the shades of death; Ponderous he falls; his clanging arms refound; And his broad buckler rings against the ground. 580 Seiz'd with affright the boldest foes appear; Ev'n godlike Hector feems himself to fear; Slow he gave way, the rest tumultuous fled; The Greeks with shouts press on, and spoil the dead; But Phœbus now from Ilion's towering height Shines forth reveal'd, and animates the fight. Trojans, be bold, and force with force oppose; Your foaming steeds urge headlong on the foes! Nor are their bodies rocks, nor ribb'd with feel; Your weapons enter, and your strokes they feel. 500 Have ye forgot what feem'd your dread before? The great, the fierce Achilles fights no more.

Apollo thus from Ilion's lofty towers
Array'd in terrours, rouz'd the Trojan powers:

While

While War's fierce Goddels fires the Grecian foe, 595
And shouts and thunders in the fields below.
Then great Diores fell, by doom divine,
In vain his valour, and illustrious line.
A broken rock the force of Pirus threw
(Who from cold Ænus led the Thracian crew); 600
Full on his ankle dropt the ponderous stone,
Burst the strong nerves, and crash'd the folid bone:
Supine he tumbles on the crimson sands,
Before his helpless friends and native bands,
And spreads for aid his unavailing hands
The foe rush'd furious as he pants for breath,
And through his navel drove the pointed death:
His gushing entrails simok'd upon the ground,
And the warm life came issuing from the wound.

His lance bold Thoas at the conqueror fent, 610 Deep in his breast above the papit went. Amic' the lungs was fix'd the winged wood, And quivering in his heaving bosom stood: Till from the dying chief, approaching near, Th' Ætolian warriour tugg'd his weighty spear: 615 Then fudden wav'd his flaming faulchion round, And gash'd his belly with alghastly wound, The corpfe now breathless on the bloody plain, To spoil his arms the victor strove in vain; The Thracian bands against the victor prest; 620 A grove of lances glitter'd at his breaft. Stern Thoas, glaring with revengeful eyes, In fullen fury flowly quits the prize.

Thus

Thus fell two heroes; one the pride of Thrace,
And one the leader of the Epian race?

Death's fable shade at once o'eroast their eyes,
In dust the vanquish'd, and the victor lies.

With copious slaughter all the fields are red,
And heap'd with growing mountains of the dead.

Had some brave chief this martial scene beheld,

By Pallas guarded through the dreadful field;

Might darts be bid to turn their points away,

And swords around him innocently play;

The war's whole art with wonder had he seen,

And counted heroes where he counted men.

635

So fought each host with thirst of glory fir'd,

And crouds on crouds triumphantly expir'd.

And the warm life came ifficing from the wound.

Alie faire bold Those at the conquest fent.

Deep in his break above the pap it were.

Amic the lunge was fix'd the winged wood.

And quivering in his heaving before food, a bugger vistade a dise will bed bleier but a lated from Such grant the grift of

I also de la seconda de la compania del compania de la compania de la compania del compania de la compania del compania de la compania de la compania de la compania del compania de la compania de la compania de la compania de la compania del compania d

I'll from the dying chief, approaching near, and Then folken warrour tagg'd his weighted from found.

Then folken ward his haming faulchion round.

The caryle new bracklete on the block blain,

THE

THE

TO THE TOWN BY ON THE TOWN

Clock from severale, and projects the free council die growth and place of the council of the co

OF THE

I, L I A D

Thouse to they where he is healed to the trapple of the property of the trapple of trapple of the trapple of trapple

the Greek carrier the reft trooterile it faints
Carriered to an all the state of the reft in the reft

The first befrie continues through this book. The

THE ARGUMENT

The Acts of Diomed.

DIOMED, affifted by Pallas, performs wonders in this day's battle. Pandarus wounds him with an arrow, But the Goddess cures him, enables him to difcern Gods from mortals, and prohibits him from contending with any of the former, excepting Venus. Æneas joins Pandarus to oppose him: Pandarus is killed, and Æneas in great danger, but for the affistance of Venus; who as the is removing her fon from the fight, is wounded on the hand by Diomed. Apollo teconds her in his rescue, and at length carries off Æneas to Troy, where he is healed in the temple of Pergamus. Mars rallies the Trojans, and affifts Hector to make a stand. In the mean time Æneas is restored to the field, and they overthrow several of the Greeks; among the rest Tlepolemus is slain by Sarpeden. Juno and Minerva descend to resist Mars; the latter incites Diomed to go against that God; he wounds him, and fends him groaning to heaven.

The first battle continues through this book. The scene is the same as in the former.

THE

I L I A D.

BOOK V.

B Fills with her force, and warms with all her fires,
Above the Greeks his deathless fame to raise,
And crown her hero with distinguish'd praise.
High on his helm celestial lightnings play,
His beamy shield emits a living ray;
Th' unweary'd blaze incessant streams supplies,
Like the red star that fires th' autumnal skies,
When fresh he rears his radiant orb to sight,
And bath'd in Ocean, shoots a keener light.
Such glories Pallas on the chief bestow'd,
Such, from his arms, the fierce essugence flow'd;
Onward she drives him, surious to engage,
Where the fight burns, and where the thickest rage,

The fons of Dares first the combat sought,

A wealthy priest, but rich without a fault;
In Vulcan's fane the father's days were led,
The sons to toils of glorious battle bred;
These singled from their troops the fight maintain,
These from their steeds, Tydides on the plain.

Fierce for renown the brother chiefs draw near,
And first bold Phegeus cast his sounding spear,

Which

Which o'er the warriour's shoulder took its course, And spent in empty air its erring force. Not fo, Tydides, flew thy lance in vain, But pierc'd his breaft, and ftretch'd him on the plain. Seiz'd with unufual fear, Idaeus fled, Left the rich chariot, and his brother dead. And had not Vulcan lent celestial aid. He too had funk to death's eternal shade; But in a finoky cloud the God of fire Preserv'd the son, in pity to the sire. The fleeds and chariot, to the navy led, Encreas'd the spoils of gallant Diomed.

Struck with amaze and shame, the Trojan crew Or flain, or fled, the fons of Dares view; When by the blood-ftain'd hand Minerva preft The God of battles, and this speech addrest.

Stern power of war! by whom the mighty fall, Who bathe in blood, and shake the lofty wall! Let the brave chiefs their glorious toils divide ; And whose the conquest mighty Jove decide : While we from interdicted fields retire, Nor tempt the wrath of heaven's avenging Sire.

Her words allay'd th' impetuous warriour's heat, 45 The God of arms and martial Maid retreat; Remov'd from fight, on Xanthus' flowery bounds They fat, and liften'd to the dying founds.

Meantime, the Greeks the Trojan race purfue, And some bold chieftain every leader slew : First Odius falls, and bites the bloody fand, His death ennobled by Atrides' hand;

30

But he, the mystick will of heaven unknown,
Nor saw his country's peril, nor his own.
The hapless artist, while confus'd he sted,
The spear of Merion mingled with the dead.
Through his right hip with forceful fury cast,
Between the bladder and the bone it past:
Prone on his knees he falls with fruitless cries,
And death in lasting slumber seals his eyes.

From Meges' force the swift Pedæus sted,
Antenor's offspring from a foreign bed,
Whose generous spouse, Theano, heavenly fair,
Nurs'd the young stranger with a mother's care.
How vain those cares! when Meges in the rear
Full in his nape infix'd the fatal spear;
Swift through his crackling jaws the weapon glides,
And the cold tongue the grinning teeth divides.

Then dy'd Hypsenor, generous and divine,
Sprung from the brave Dolopian's mighty line,
Who near ador'd Scamander made abode,
Priest of the stream, and honour'd as a God.
On him, amidst the slying numbers found,
Eurypylus inslicts a deadly wound;
On his broad shoulders fell the forceful brand,
Then glancing downward lopp'd his holy hand,
Which stain'd with sacred blood the blushing sand.
Down sunk the priest: the purple hand of death
Clos'd his dim eye, and sate suppress'd his breath.

Thus toil'd the chiefs, in different parts engag'd,
In every quarter fierce Tydides rag'd,
Amid the Greek, amid the Trojan train,
Rapt through the ranks he thunders o'er the plain;

Now !

Now here, now there, he darts from place to place,
Pours on the rear, or lightens in their face.

Thus from high hills the torrents fwift and firong
Deluge whole fields, and fweep the trees along,
Through ruin'd moles the ruthing wave refounds,
O'erwhelms the bridge, and bursts the losty bounds.
The yellow harvests of the ripen'd year,
And flatted vineyards, one fad waste appear!
While Jove descends in sluicy sheets of rain,
And all the labours of mankind are vain.

So rag'd Tydides, boundless in his ire,
Drove armies back, and made all Troy retire.

With grief the * leader of the Lycian band
Saw the wide walte of his destructive hand:
His bended bow against the chief he drew;
Swift to the mark the thirsty arrow flew,
Whose forky point the hollow breast-plate tore,
Deep in his shoulder pierc'd, and drank the gore;
The rushing stream his brazen armour dy'd,
While the proud archer thus exulting cry'd.

Hither, ye Trojans, hither drive your steeds! Lo! by our hand the bravest Grecian bleeds. Not long the dreadful dart he can sustain; Or Phoebus urg d me to these fields in vain.

So spoke he, boastful; but the winged dart
Stopt short of life, and mock'd the shooter's art.
The wounded chief, behind his car retir'd,
The helping hand of Sthenelus requir'd;
Swift from his seat he leap'd upon the ground,
And tugg'd the weapon from the gushing wound;

Pandarus,

When thus the king his guardian power addrest, The purple current wandering o'er his vest. 143

O progeny of Jove! unconquer'd maid!

If e'er my godlike Sire deserv'd thy aid,

If e'er I felt thee in the fighting field;

Now, Goddes, now thy facred succour yield.

Oh give my lance to reach the Trojan knight,

Whose arrow wounds the chief thou guard'st in fight;

And lay the boaster groveling on the shore,

That vaunts these eyes shall view the light no more.

Thus pray'd Tydides, and Minerva heard; His nerves confirm'd, his languid spirits chear'd, He feels each limb with wonted vigour light; His beating bosom claims the promis'd fight. Be bold (she cry'd) in every combat shine, War be thy province, thy protection mine; Rush to the fight, and every foe controul; 160 Wake each paternal virtue in thy foul: Strength swells thy boiling breast, infus'd by me, And all thy godlike father breathes in thee ! Yet more, from mortal mists I purge thy eyes, And fet to view the warring Deities. 169 These see thou shun, through all th' embattled plain, Nor rathly strive where human force is vain. If Venus mingle in the martial band, Her shalt thou wound: so Pallas gives command. With that, the blue-ey'd virgin wing'd her flight;

With that, the blue-ey'd virgin wing'd her flight;
The hero rush'd impetuous to the fight;
With tenfold ardour now invades the plain,
Wild with delay, and more enrag'd by pain.

AS

1

1

V

0

C

A

T

T

As on the fleecy flocks, when hunger calls, Amidst the field a brindled lion falls; , 375 If chance some shepherd with a distant dark The favage wound, he roufes at the fmart, He foams, he roars; the fhepherd dares not fray, But trembling leaves the scattering flocks a prey; Heaps fall on heaps; he bathes with blood the ground, Then leaps victorious o'er the lofty mound. Not with less fury stern Tydides flew; And two brave leaders at an instant slew: Aftynous breathless fell, and by his fide His people's paftor, good Hypenor, dy'd; Aftynous' breaft the deadly lance receives, Hypenor's shoulder his broad falchion cleaves. Those slain he left; and sprung with stoble rage Abas and Polyidus to engage; Sons of Eurydamus, who wife and old, Could fates foresee, and mystic dreams unfold; The youths return'd not from the doubtful plain, And the fad father try'd his arts in vain; No mystic dream could make their fates appear, Though now determin'd by Tydides' spear.

Young Xanthus next, and Thöon felt his rage;
The joy and hope of Phænops' feeble age;
Vast was his wealth, and these the only heirs
Of all his labours, and a life of cares.
Cold death o'ertakes them in their blooming years, 200
And leaves the father unavailing tears:
To strangers now descends his heapy store,
The race forgotton, and the name no more.

Two

Two fons of Priam in one chariot ride,
Glittering in arms, and combat fide by fide.

As when the lordly lion feeks his food
Where grazing heifers range the lonely wood,
He leaps amidst them with a furious bound,
Bends their strong necks, and tears them to the ground:
So from their seats the brother chiefs are torn,
Their steeds and chariot to the navy born.

With deep concern divine Aneas view'd
The foe prevailing, and his friends pursued,
Through the thick storm of singing spears he slies,
Exploring Pandarus with careful eyes,
At length he found Lycaon's mighty son;
To whom the chief of Venus' race begun.

Where, Pandarus, are all thy honours now,
Thy winged arrows and unerring bow,
Thy matchle's skill, thy yet unrivall'd fame,
And boasted glory of the Lycian name?
Oh pierce that mortal! if we mortal call
That wondrous force by which whole armies fall;
Or God incens'd, who quits the distant skies
To punish Troy for slighted facrifice;
(Which oh avert from our unhappy state!
For what so dreadful as celestial hate?)
Whoe'er he be, propitiate Jove with prayer;
If man, destroy; if God, intreat to spare.

To him the Lycian. Whom your eyes behold,
If right I judge, is Diomed the bold!

Such courfers whirl him o'er the dusty field,
So towers his helmet, and so stames his shield.

IF

1

T

In Se

ILIAD, BOOK V. If 'tis a God, be wears, that chief's disguise; Or if that chief, some guardian of the skies Involv'd in clouds, protects him in the fray, And turns unseen the frustrate dart away. I wing'd an arrow, which not idly fell, The stroke had fix'd him to the gates of hell; And, but some God, some angry God withstands, 240 His fate was due to these unerring hands. Skill'd in the bow, on foot I fought the war, Nor join'd fwift horses to the rapid car. Ten polish'd chariots I possess'd at home, And still they grace Lycaon's princely dome: 245 There veil'd in spacious coverlets they stand; And twice ten courfers wait their lord's command. The good old warriour bade me trust to these, When first for Troy I fail'd the facred feas; In fields, aloft, the whirling car to guide, 250 And through the ranks of death triumphant ride. But vain with youth, and yet to thrift inclin'd, I heard his councils with unheedful mind, And thought the fleeds (your large fupplies unknown) Might fail. of forage in the straiten'd town: 255 So took my bow and pointed darts in hand, And left the chariots in my native land. Too late, O friend! my rashness I deplore; These shafts, once fatal, carry death no more. Tydeus' and Atreus' fons their points have found And undiffembled gore purfued the wound. In vain they bled: this unavailing bow Serves, not to flaughter, but provoke the foe. In 25

If

In evil hour these bended horns I strung,
And seiz'd the quiver where it idly hung.

Curs'd be the fate that sent me to the field,
Without a warriour's arms, the spear and shield!

If e'er with life I quit the Trojan plain,
If e'er I see my spouse and sire again,
This bow, unfaithful to my glorious aims,

270

Broke by my hand, shall feed the blazing slames.

To whom the leader of the Dardan race: Be calm, nor Phæbus' honour'd gift difgrace. The distant dart be prais'd, though here we need The rushing chariot, and the bounding steed. Against you hero let us bend our course, And, hand to hand, encounter force with force, Now mount my feat, and from the chariot's height. Observe my father's steeds, renown'd in fight . Practis'd alike to turn, to stop, to chace, 280 To dare the shock, or arge the rapid race: Secure with these, through fighting fields we go; Or fafe to Troy, if Jove affet the foe. Hafte, seize the whip, and fnatch the guiding rein; The warriour's fury let this arm fuftain; Or, if to combat thy bold heart incline, Take thou the spear, the chariot's care be mine.

O prince! (Lycaon's valiant son reply'd)
As thine the steeds, be thine the task to guide.
The horses, practis'd to their lord's command,
Shall bear the rein, and answer to thy hand.
But if, unhappy, we desert the fight,
Thy voice alone can animate their slight:

Elfe

T

290

Else shall our fates be number'd with the dead,
And these, the victor's prize, in triumph led.

295
Thine be the guidance then: with spear and shield
Myself will charge this terrour of the field.

And now both heroes mount the glittering car;
The bounding coursers rush amidst the war.
Their fierce approach bold Sthenelus espy'd,
Who thus, alarm'd, to great Tydides cry'd.

O friend! two chiefs of force immense I see,
Dreadful they come, and bend their rage on thee:
Lo the brave heir of old Lycaon's line,
And great Æneas, sprung from race divine!

305
Enough is given to same. Ascend thy car;
And save a life, the bulwark of our war.

At this the hero cast a gloomy look, Fix'd on the chief with scorn; and thus he spoke.

Me dost thou bid to shun the coming fight? 310 Me would'st thou move to base, inglorious flight? Know, 'tis not honest in my soul to fear, Nor was Tydides born to tremble here. I hate the cumbrous chariot's flow advance, And the long distance of the flying lance; 315 But while my nerves are strong, my force entire, Thus front the foe, and emulate my fire. Nor shall you steeds that fierce to fight convey-Those threatening heroes, bear them both away; One chief at least beneath this arm shall die; So Pallas tells me, and forbids to fly. But if she dooms, and if no God withstand, That both shall fall by one victorious hand

Vol. I.

Then heed my words: my horfes here detain,

Fix'd to the chariot by the strasten'd rein;

Swift to Æneas' empty seat proceed,

And seize the coursers of ætherial breed:

The race of those, which once the thundering God

For ravish'd Ganymede on Tros bestow'd,

The best that e'er on earth's broad surface run,

Beneath the rising or the setting sun.

Hence great Anchises stole a breed, unknown

By mortal mares, from serce Laomedon:

Four of this race his ample stalls contain,

And two transport Æneas o'er the plain.

These, were the rich immortal prize our own,

Through the wide world should make our glory known.

Thus while they spoke, the soe came surious on,

And stern Lycaon's warlike race begun.

Prince, thou art met. Though late in vain affail'd,

The spear may enter where the arrow fail'd. 7

He faid, then shook the ponderous lance, and slung;
On his broad shield the sounding weapon rung,
Pierc'd the tough orb, and in his cuirass hung.
He bleeds! the pride of Greece! (the boaster cries)
Our triumph now, the mighty warriour lies!
Mistaken vaunter! Diomed reply'd;
Thy dart has err'd, and now my spear be try'd:
Ye 'scape not both; one, headlong from his car,
With hostile blood shall glut the God of War.

150

He spoke, and rising hurl'd his forceful dart, Which, driven by Pallas, pierc'd a vital part; Full in his face it enter'd, and betwixt The nose and eye-ball the proud Lycian fixt;

Crash'd

Crash'd all his jaws, and cleft the tongue within, 355
Till the bright point look'd out beneath the chin.
Headlong he falls, his helmet knocks the ground;
Earth groans beneath him, and his arms resound;
The starting coursers tremble with affright;
The soul indignant seeks the realms of night.

To guard his flaughter'd friend, Theas flies, His fpear extending where the carcafe lies : Watchful he wheels, protects it every way, As the grim lion stalks around his prey. O'er the fall'n trunk his ample thickl difplay'd, 26; He hides the hero with his mighty thate, in And threats aloud: the Greeks with longing eyes . Behold at distance, but forbear the prize. Then fierce Tydides Roops; and from the fields Heav'd with vast force, a rocky fragment wields. Not two strong men th' enormous weight could raise, Such men as live in these degenerate days. He fwung it round; and gathering strength to throw, Discharg'd the ponderous ruin at the foe. Where to the hip th' inserted thigh unites, Full on the bone the pointed marble lights; Through both the tendons broke the rugged ftone, And stripp'd the skin, and crack'd the folid bone. Sunk on his knees, and staggering with his pains, His falling bulk his bended arm fustains; 280 Loft in a dizzy mist the warriour lies; A sudden cloud comes swimming o'er his eyes. There the brave chief who mighty numbers fway'd, Oppress'd had funk to death's eternal made;

M 2

But heavenly Venus, mindful of the love '385
She bore Anchifes in th' Idæan grove,
His danger views with anguish and despair,
And guards her offspring with a mother's care.
About her much-lov'd son her arms she throws,
Her arms whose whiteness match the falling snows.
Screen'd from the soe behind her shining veil,
The swords wave harmless, and the javelins fail:
Safe through the rushing horse, and feather'd slight
Of sounding shafts, she bears him from the fight.

Meanwhile (his conquest ravish'd from his eyes)
The raging chief in chace of Venus slies:
No Goddess she commission'd to the field,
Like Pallas dreadful with her sable shield,
Or fierce Bellona thundering at the wall,
While slames ascend, and mighty ruins fall;
He knew soft combats suit the tender dame,
New to the field, and still a foe to same.

Through

10

W

TP

Through breaking ranks his furious course he bends, And at the Goddess his broad lance extends; Through her bright veil the daring weapon drove, Th' ambrofial veil, which all the Graces wove; Her fnowy hand the razing steel profan'd, And the transparent skin with crimson stain'd. From the clear vein a stream immortal flow'd. Such stream as iffues from a wounded God: Pure emanation! uncorrupted flood; Unlike our groß, diseas'd, terrestrial blood: (For not the bread of man their life fultains, Nor wine's inflaming juice supplies their veins.) With tender shrieks the Goddess fill'd the place, And dropt her offspring from her weak embrace. Him Phoebus took: he casts a cloud around The fainting chief, and wards the mortal wound: 430

Then, with a voice that shook the vaulted skies,
The king insults the Goddess as she slies.
Ill with Jove's daughter bloody fights agree,
The field of combat is no scene for thee:
Go, let thy own soft sex employ thy care,
Go, lull the coward, or delude the fair.
Taught by this stroke, renounce the war's alarms,
And searn to tremble at the name of arms.

Tydides thus. The Goddess, seiz'd with dread, Confus'd, distracted, from the conslict fled. 440. To aid her, swift the winged Iris flew, Wrapt in a mist above the warring crew. The Queen of Love with faded charms she found, Pale, was her cheek, and livid look'd the wound.

M 3

To

To Mars, who fat remote, they bent their way, Far on the left, with clouds involved he lay; Befide him flood his fance, diffain'd with bore, And, rem'd with gold, his foaming fleeds before. Low at his knee, the begg'd, with ftreaming eyes, Her brother's car, to mount the distant skies, And shew'd the wound by fierce! Tydides given, A mortal man, who dares encounter heaven. Stern Mars attentive hears the Queen complain, And to her hand commits the golden rein; She mounts the feat, oppress'd with filent woe, Driven by the Goddess of the painted bow. The last refounds, the rapid charlot flies, And in a moment scales the lofty skies: There stopped the car, and there the coursers stood, Fed by fair Iris with ambrofial food. Before her mother, Love's bright Queen appears, O'erwhelm'd with anguish and disfoly'd in tears; She rais'd her in her arms, beheld her bleedy And ask'd, what God had wrought this guilty deed?

Then she; This insult from no God I found, '465
An impious mortal gave the daring wound!
Behold the deed of haughty Diomed!
'Twas in the son's defence the mother blede
The war with Troy no more the Grecians wage,
But with the Gods (th' immortal Gods) engage. 470

Dione then. Thy wrongs with patience bear, And share those griefs inferior powers must share: Unnumber d woes mankind from us sustain, And men with woes afflict the Gods again.

The

ILIAD, BOOK V. 167 The mighty Mars in mortal fetters bound, And lodg'd in brazen dungeons under ground, Full thirteen moons imprison't roar'd in vain; Otus and Ephialtes held the chain : Perhaps had perish'd; had not Hermes' care Restor'd the groaning God to upper air. Great Juno's felf has bore her weight of pain, Th' imperial partner of the heavenly reign; Amphitryon's fon infix'd the deadly dart, And fill'd with anguish her immortal heart. Ev'n hell's grim king Alcides' power confest, The shaft found entrance in his iron breast; To Jove's high palace for a cure he fled, Pierc'd in his own dominions of the dead; Where Pæon, sprinkling heavenly balm around, Affuag'd the glowing pangs, and clos'd the wound. Rash, impious man! to stain the blest abodes, And drench his arrows in the blood of Gods! But thou (though Pallas urg'd thy frantic deed) Whose spear ill-fated makes a Goddess bleed, Know thou, whoe'er with heavenly power contends, Short is his date, and foon his glory ends; From fields of death when late he shall retire, No infant on his knees shall call him Sire. Strong as thou art, some God may yet be found, To stretch thee pale and gasping on the ground; Thy distant wife, Ægiale the fair, Starting from fleep with a distracted air, Shall rouse thy slaves, and her lost lord deplore, The brave, the great, the florious, now no more!

NI 4

This

This faid, she wip'd from Venus' wounded palm.
The facred ichor, and infus'd the balm.
Juno and Pallas with a smile survey'd,
And thus to Jove began the blue-ey'd maid.

Permit thy daughter, gracious Jove! to tell
How this mischance the Cyprian Queen befell.
As late she try'd with passion to instame
The tender bosom of a Grecian dame,
Allur'd the fair with moving thoughts of joy,
To quit her country for some youth of Troy;
The classing zone, with golden buckles bound,
Raz'd her soft hand with this lamented wound.

The Sire of Gods and men superior smil'd,
And, calling Venus, thus address his child.
Not these, O daughter, are thy proper cares,
Thee milder arts best, and softer wars;
Sweet smiles are thine, and kind endearing charms,
To Mars and Pallas leave the deeds of arms.

Thus they in heaven: while on the plain below
The fierce Tydides charg'd his Dardan foe,
Flush'd with celestial blood pursu'd his way,
And fearless dar'd the threatening God of day;
Already in his hopes he saw him kill'd,
Though screen'd behind Apollo's mighty shield.
Thrice rushing surious, at the chief he strook;
His blazing buckler thrice Apollo shook:

139
He try'd the fourth: when, breaking from the cloud,
A more than mortal voice was heard aloud.

O fon of Tydeus, cease! be wise, and see How vast the difference of the Gods and thee;

Distance

Distance immense! between the powers that shine
Above, eternal, deathless, and divine,
And mortal man! a wretch of humble birth,
A short-liv'd reptile in the dust of earth.

TO

5

0

5

So spoke the God who darts celestial fires;
He dreads his fury, and some steps retires.
Then Phoebus bore the chief of Venus' race
To Troy's high fane, and to his holy place;
Latona there and Phoebe heal'd the wound,
With vigour arm'd him, and with glory crown'd.
This done, the patron of the silver bow
A phantom rais'd, the same in shape and show
With great Æneas; such the form he bore,
And such in sight the radiant arms he wore.
Around the spectre bloody wars are wag'd,
And Greece and Troy with clashing shields engag'd.
Meantime on Ilion's tower Apollo stood,
And, calling Mars, thus urg'd the raging God.

Stern power of arms, by whom the mighty fall;
Who bath'st in blood, and shak'st th' embattled wall,
Rise in thy wrath! to hell's abhorr'd abodes
555
Dispatch you Greek, and vindicate the Gods.
First rosy Venus selt his brutal rage;
Me next he charg'd, and dares all heaven engage:
The wretch would brave high heaven's immortal Sire,
His triple thunder, and his bolts of fire.
560

The God of battle issues on the plain,
Stirs all the ranks, and fires the Trojan train;
In form like Acamas, the Thracian guide,
Enrag'd, to Troy's retiring chiefs he cry'd:

How

$00

How long, ye fons of Priam! will ye fly, And unreveng'd fee Priam's people die? Still unrefisted shall the fee destroy, And firetch the flaughter to the gates of Troy? Lo brave Æneas finks beneath his wound Not. god-like Heltor more in arms renown'd : Hafte all, and take the generous warriour's part : He faid; new courage fwell'd each hero's heart. Sarpedon first his ardent foul express di. And, turn'd to Hector, these bold words address'd. Say, chief, is all thy ancient valour loft, Where are thy threats, and where thy glorious boalt, That propt alone by Priam's race should stand Troy's facred walls, nor need a foreign hand? Now, now thy country calls her wanted friends, And the proud vaunt in just derifien ends, Remote they stand, while alien troops engage, Like trembling hounds before the lion's rage. Far distant hence I held my wide command, Where foaming Xanthus laves the Lycian land, With ample wealth (the wift of mortals) bleft, A beauteous wife, and infant at her break With those I left whatever dear could be: Greece, if the conquers, nothing wins from me. Yet first in fight my Lycian bands I chear, And long to meet this mighty man ye fear; While Hector idle fands, nor bids the brave Their wives, their infants, and their altars fave. Hafte, warriour, hafte! preserve thy threaten'd flate; Or one vaft burst of all-involving fate

Full

373

Full o'er your towers shall fall, and sweep away 595
Sons, sires, and wives, an undistinguished prey.
Rouse all thy Trojans, urge thy aids to fight;
These claim thy thoughts by day, thy watch by night;
With force incessant the brave Greeks oppose;
Such cares thy friends deserve, and such thy foes. 600

Stung to the heart the generous Hector hears,
But just reproof with decent filence bears.
From his proud car the prince impetuous springs,
On earth he leaps; his brazen armour rings.
Two shining spears are brandish d in his hands; 605
Thus arm'd, he animates his drooping bands,
Revives their ardour, turns their steps from flight,
And wakes anew the dying stames of fight.
They turn, they stand, the Greeks their sury dare,
Condense their powers, and wait the growing war.

As when, on Ceres' facred floor, the fwain

Spreads the wide fan to clear the golden grain,

And the light chaff, before the breezes borne,

Afcends in clouds from off the heapy corn;

The grey dust, rising with collected winds,

Drives o'er the barn, and whitens all the hinds:

So white with dust the Grecian host appears,

From trampling steeds, and thundering charioteers;

The dusky clouds from labour'd earth arise,

And roll in smoking volumes to the skies.

Mars hovers o'er them with his fable shield,

And adds new honours to the darken'd field:

Pleas'd with his charge, and ardent to fulfil,

In Troy's defence, Apollo's heavenly will:

Soon

Soon as from fight the blue-ey'd maid retires, Each Trojan bosom with new warmth he fires. And now the God, from forth his facred fane. Produc'd Æneas to the shouting train; Alive, unharm'd, with all his peers around, Erect he flood, and vigorous from his wound: Enquiries none they made; the dreadful day No paufe of words admits, no dull delay; Fierce Discord storms, Apollo loud exclaims, Fame calls, Mars thunders, and the field's in flames. Stern Diomed with either Ajax stood, And great Ulysses, bath'd in hostile blood. Embodied close, the labouring Grecian train The fiercest shock of charging hosts sustain. Unmov'd and filent, the whole war they wait, Serenely dreadful, and as fix'd as fate. 640 So when th' embattled clouds in dark array, Along the skies their gloomy lines display; When now the North his boifterous rage has fpent, And peaceful fleeps the liquid element: The low-hung vapours, motionless and still,

Dispers'd and broken through the ruffled skies.

Nor was the general wanting to his train,

From troop to troop he toils through all the plain. 650

Ye Greeks, be men! the charge of battle bear;

Your brave associates and yourselves revere!

Let glorious acts more glorious acts inspire,

And catch from breast to breast the noble fire!

Rest on the summits of the shaded hill; Till the mass scatters as the winds arise,

On

ILIAD, BOOK V.

Oh valour's fide the odds of combat lie,

The brave live glorious, or lamented die;

The wretch who trembles in the field of fame,

Meets death, and worse than death, eternal shame.

These words he seconds with his slying lance,
To meet whose point was strong Descoon's chance.

Eneas' friend, and in his native place.
Honour'd and lov'd like Priam's royal race:
Long had he sought the foremost in the field,
But now the monarch's lance transpiere'd his shield:
His shield too weak the furious dart to stay,
Through his broad belt the weapon forc'd its way:
The grizly wound dismiss'd his soul to hell,
His arms around him rattled as he fell.

Then fierce Æneas, brandishing his blade, In dust Orsilochus and Crethon laid, Whose fire Diocleus, wealthy, brave, and great, In well built Pheræ held his lofty feat: Sprung from Alpheus' plenteous stream ! that yields Increase of harvests to the Pylian fields. He got Orfilochus, Diöcleus he, And these descended in the third degree. Too early expert in the martial toil, In fable ships they left their native foil, . T' avenge Atrides : now, untimely flain, They fell with glory on the Phiygian plain. So two young mountain lions, nurs'd with blood In deep recesses of the gloomy wood, Rush fearless to the plains, and uncontrol'd Depopulate the stalls, and waste the fold;

Till

Till pierc'd at distance from their native den, O'erpower'd they fall beneath the force of men. Prostrate on earth their beauteous hodies lay, Like mountain firs, as tall and straight as they. Great Menelaiis views with pitying eyes, Lifts his bright lance, and at the victor flies; Mars urg'd him on; yet, ruthless in his hate, The God but urg'd him to provoke his fate. He thus advancing, Neftor's valiant fon Shakes for his danger, and neglects his own; Struck with the thought, should Helen's lord be sain, And all his country's glorious labours vain. Already met, the threatening heroes stand; The spears already tremble in their hand: In rush'd Antilochus, his aid to bring, And fall or conquer by the Spartan king. These feen, the Dardan backward turn'd his course, Brave as he was, and hunn'd unequal force, The breathless bodies to the Greeks they drew, Then mix in combat, and their toils renew.

First Pylamenes, great in bartle, bled,
Who sheath'd in brass the Paphlagonians led.
Atrides mark'd him where sublime he shood;
Fix'd in his throat, the javelin drank his blood.
The faithful Mydon, as he turn'd from fight
His slying coursers, sunk to endless night:
A broken rock by Nestor's son was thrown;
His bended arm receiv'd the falling stone,
From his numbid hand the ivory-studded seins,
Dropt in the dust, are trailed along the plains:

Mean.

685

90

00

Meanwhile his temples feel a deadly wound;
He groans in death, and ponderous finks to ground;
Deep drove his helmet in the fands, and there
The head flood fix'd, the quivering legs in air,
Till trampled flat beneath the courfer's feet:
The youthful victor mounts his empty feat,
And bears the prize in triumph to the fleet.

Great Hector saw, and raging at the view

Pours on the Greeks; the Trojan troops pursue:

He fires his host with animating cries,

And brings along the furies of the skies.

725

Mars, stern destroyer! and Bellona dread,

Flame in the front, and thunder at their head:

This swells the tumult and the rage of fight;

That shakes a spear that casts a dreadful light.

Where Hector march'd, the God of battles shin'd, 730

Now storm'd before him, and now rag'd behind.

Tydides paus'd amidst his full career;
Then first the hero's manly breast knew fear.
As when some simple swain his cot forsakes,
And wide through fens an unknown journey takes;
If chance a swelling brook his passage stay,
And foam impervious cross the wanderer's way,
Confus'd he stops, a length of country pass,
Eyes the rough waves, and, tir'd, returns at last.
Amaz'd no less the great Tydides stands;
He stay'd, and, turning, thus address'd his bands.

He stay'd, and, turning, thus address'd his bands.

No wonder, Greeks! that all to Hector yield,

Secure of favouring Gods, he takes the field;

His strokes they second, and avert our spears:

Behold where Mars in mortal arms appears!

745

Retire

Retire then, warriours, but sedate and slow;
Retire, but with your faces to the foe.
Trust not too much your unavailing might;
'Tis not with Troy, but with the Gods ye fight.

Now near the Greeks, the black battalions drew; And first two leaders valiant Hector slew : His force Anchialus and Mnesthes found, In every art of glorious war renown'd; In the same car the chiefs to combat ride, And fought united, and united died. Struck at the fight, the mighty Ajax glows With thirst of vengeance, and assaults the foes. His massy spear with matchless fury fent, Through Amphius' belt and heaving belly went: Amphius Apæsus' happy soil posses'd, With herds abounding, and with treasure bless'd; But fate refiftless from his country led The chief, to perish at his people's head. Shook with his fall, his brazen armour rung, And fierce, to feize it, conquering Ajax fprung; 765 Around his head an iron tempest rain'd; A wood of spears his ample shield sustain'd; Beneath one foot the yet-warm corple he prest, And drew his javelin from the bleeding breaft : He could no more; the showering darts deny'd. To spoil his glittering arms and plumy pride. Now foes on foes came pouring on the fields. With briftling lances, and compacted shields Till, in the steely circle straighten'd round, Forc'd he gives way, and sternly quits the ground.

While

While thus they strive, Tlepomelus the great,
Urg'd by the force of unresisted fate,
Burns with desire Sarpedon's strength to prove;
Alcides' offspring meets the son of Jove.
Sheath'd in bright arms each adverse chief came on,
Jove's great descendant, and his greater son.
Prepar'd for combat, ere the lance he tost,
The daring Rhodian vents his haughty boast.

What brings this Lycian counfellor fo far, To tremble at our arms, not mix in war? Know thy vain felf; nor let their flattery move, Who style thee fon of cloud-compelling love. How far unlike those chiefs of race divine, How vast the difference of their deeds and thine ! love got fuch heroes as my fire, whose foul No fear could daunt, nor earth nor hell controul. Troy felt his arm, and you proud ramparts stand Rais'd on the ruins of his vengeful hand With fix small ships, and but a slender train, He left the town a wide deserted plain. But what art thou? who deedless look'ft around, While unreveng'd thy Lycians bite the ground: Small aid to Troy thy feeble force can be, But, wert thou greater, thou must yield to me. Pierc'd by my spear, to endless darkness go! \ 800 I make this present to the shades below.

The fon of Hercules, the Rhodian guide,
Thus haughty spoke. The Lycian king reply'd.
Thy sire, O prince! o'erturn'd the Trojan state,
Whose perjur'd monarch well deserv'd his fate;

805
Vol. 1.
Those

ile

Those heavenly steeds the hero sought so far, False he detain'd, the just reward of war. Nor so content, the generous chief defy'd, With base reproathes and unmanly pride. But you, unworthy the high race you boast, Shall raise my glory when thy own is lost: Now meet, thy fate, and, by Sarpedon slain, Add one more ghost to Pluto's gloomy reign.

He said: both javelins at an instant flew;
Both struck, both wounded; but Sarpedon's slew:
Full in the boaster's neck the weapon stood,
Transfix'd his throat, and drank the vital blood;
The soul distainful seeks the caves of night,
And his seal'd eyes for ever lose the light.

Yet not in vain, Tlepolemus, was thrown Thy angry lance; which, piercing to the bone Sarpedon's thigh, had robb'd the chief of breath; But Jove was prefent, and forbade the death. Borne from the conflict by his Lycian throng, The wounded hero dragg'd the lance along. 825 (His friends, each busied in his several part, Through hafte, or danger, had not drawn the dart.) The Greeks with flain Tlepolemus retir'd; Whose fall Ulysses view'd, with fury fir'd; Doubtful if Jove's great fon he should purfue, 830 Or pour his vengeance on the Lycian crew. But heaven and fate the first design withstand, Nor this great death must mace Ulysses' hand. Minerva drives him on the Lycian train; Alastor, Cromius, Halius, strow'd the plain, Alcander,

Alcander, Prytanis, Noëmon fell:
And numbers more his fword had fent to hell,
But Hector faw; and, furious at the fight,
Rush'd terrible amidst the ranks of fight.
With joy Sarpedon view'd the wish'd relief,
And, faint, lamenting, thus implor'd the chief.

Oh suffer not the foe to bear away

My helples corpse, an unassisted prey;

If I, unblest, must see my son no more,

My much-lov'd confort, and my native shore,

Yet let me die in Ilion's sacred wall;

Troy, in whose cause I fell, shall mourn my fall.

He said, nor Hector to the chief replies,

But shakes his plume, and sierce to combat slies;

Swift as a whirlwind, drives the scattering foes; 330
And dyes the ground with purple as he goes.

820

830

der,

Beneath a beech, Jove's confecrated shade,
His mournful friends divine Sarpeston laid:
Brave Pelagon, his favourite chief, was nigh,
Who wrench'd the javelin from his snewy thigh. So,
The fainting soul stood ready wing'd for slight,
And o'er his eye-balls swam the shades of night;
But Boreas rising fresh, with gentle breath,
Recall'd his spirit from the gates of death.

The generous Greeks recede with tardy pace, She Though Mars and Hector thunder in their face; None turn their backs to mean ignoble flight, Slow they retreat, and ev'n retreating fight.

Who first, who last, by Mars and Hector's hand Stretch'd in their blood, lay gasping on the sand? 865

Teuthras the great, Orestes the renown'd

For manag'd steeds, and Trechus press'd the ground;
Next Oenomaus, and Oenops' offspring dy'd;
Orestius last fell groaning at their side:
Orestius, in his painted mitre gay,
In fat Boeotia held his wealthy sway,
Where lakes surround low Hyle's watery plain;
A prince and people studious of their gain.

The carnage Juno from the skies survey'd,
And, touch'd with grief, bespoke the blue-ey'd maid.
Oh sight accurst! shall faithless Troy prevail,
And shall our promise to our people fail?
How vain the word to Menelaus given
By Jove's great daughter and the Queen of Heaven,
Beneath his arms that Priam's towers should fall. 880
If warring Gods for ever guard the wall!
Mars, red with slaughter, aids our hated foes:
Haste, let us arm, and force with force oppose!

She spoke; Minerva burns to meet the war:
And now heaven's empress calls her blazing car. $85
At her command rush forth the steeds divine;
Rich with immortal gold their trappings shine.
Bright Hebè waits; by Hebè, ever young,
The whirling wheels are to the chariot hung.
On the bright axle turns the bidden wheel
Of sounding brass; the polish'd axle steel.
Eight brazen spokes in radiant order stame;
The circles gold, of uncorrupted frame,
Such as the heavens produce: and round the gold
Two brazen rings of work divine were roll'd.

The

The boffy naves of folid filver shone; Braces of gold fuspend the moving throne: The car, behind, an arching figure bore; The bending concave form'd an arch before. Silver the beam, th' extended yoke was gold, And golden reins th' immortal coursers hold. Herself, impatient, to the ready car The courfers joins, and breathes revenge and war.

id.

880

890

895 The

Pallas difrobes; her radiant veil unty'd, With flowers adorn'd, with art diversify'd, (The labour'd veil her heavenly fingers wove) Flows on the pavement of the court of Jove. Now heaven's dread arms her mighty limbs invest, Jove's cuirass blazes on her ample breast; Deck'd in fad triumph for the mournful field, O'er her broad shoulders hangs his horrid shield, Dire, black, tremendous! Round the margin roll'd, A fringe of ferpents hiffing guards the gold : Here all the terrours of grim war appear, Here rages Force, here tremble Flight and Fear, 975 Here storm'd Contention, and here Fury frown'd, And the dire orb portentous Gorgon crown'd. The massy golden helm she next assumes; That dreadful node with four o'ershading plumes; So vast, the broad circumference contains A hundred armies on a hundred plains. The Goddess thus th' imperial car ascends; Shook by her arm the mighty javelin bends, Ponderous and huge; that, when her fury burns,

Proud tyrants humbles, and whole hofts o'erturns. N 3

Swift at the scourge th' ethereal coursers fly, While the smooth chariot cuts the liquid sky. Heaven's gates spontaneous open to the powers; Heaven's golden gates, kept by the winged hours; Commission'd in alternate watch they stand, The fun's bright portals and the skies command, Involve in clouds th' eternal gates of day, Or the dark barrier roll with eafe away. The founding hinges ring; on either fide The gloomy volumes, pierc'd with light, divide. The chariot mounts, where deep in ambient fkies Confus'd, Olympus' hundred heads arise; Where far apart the Thunderer fills his throne; O'er all the Gods fuperiour and alone. There with her snowy hand the queen restrains The fiery fleeds, and thus to Jove complains.

O Sire! can no refentment touch thy foul?
Can Mars rebel, and does no thunder roll?
What lawless rage on you forbidden plain,
What rash destruction! and what heroes slain!
Venus, and Phœbus with the dreadful bow,
Smile on the slaughter, and enjoysmy woe.
Mad, furious power! whose unrelenting mind
No Ged can govern, and no justice bind.
Say, mighty father! shall we scourge his pride,
And drive from fight th' impetuous homicide?

To whom affenting, thus the Thunderer faid: Go! and the great Minerva be thy aid. To tame the Monster-god Minerva knows, And oft afflicts his brutal breast with woes.

955 He

He faid; Saturnia, ardent'to obey, Lash'd her white steeds along th' aërial way. Swift down the steep of heaven the chariot rolls, Between th' expanded earth and starry poles. Far as a shepherd, from some point on high, 96 O'er the wide main extends his boundless eye; Through fuch a space of air, with thundering sound, At every leap th' immortal coursers bound: Troy now they reach'd, and touch'd those banks divine Where filver Simois and Scamander join. There Juno stopp'd, (and her fair steeds unloos'd) Of air condens'd a vapour circumfus'd: For these, impregnate with celestial dew On Simois' brink ambrofial herbage grew. Thence to relieve the fainting Argive throng, Smooth as the failing doves, they glide along.

The best and bravest of the Grecian band (A warlike circle) round Tydides stand : Such was their look as lions bath'd in blood, Or foaming boars, the terrour of the wood. Heaven's Empress mingles with the mortal croud, And shouts, in Stentor's sounding voice, aloud: Stentor the strong, endued with brazen lungs, Whose throat furpass'd the force of fifty tongues.

Inglorious Argives! to your race a shame, .980 And only men in figure and in name! Once from the walls your timorous foes engag'd, While fierce in war divine Achilles ragid; Now iffuing fearless they possess the plain, Now win the shores, and scarce the seas remain.

50

55 He

Her speech new fury to their hearts convey'd; While near Tydides stood th' Athenian maid; The king beside his panting steeds she found, O'erspent with toil, reposing on the ground: To cool his glowing wound he sat apart (The wound inslicted by the Lycian dart); Large drops of sweat from all his limbs descend, Beneath his ponderous shield his sinews bend, Whose ample belt, that o'er his shoulder lay, He eas'd; and wash'd the clotted gore away. The Goddess leaning o'er the bending yoke, Beside his coursers, thus her silence broke.

Degenerate prince! and not of Tydeus' kind,
Whose little body lodg'd a mighty mind;
Foremost he press'd in glorious toils to share,
And scarce refrain'd when I forbade the war.
Alone, unguarded, once he dar'd to go
And feast, encircled by the Theban foe;
There brav'd, and vanquish'd, many a hardy knight;
Such nerves I gave him, and such force in fight. 1005
Thou too no less hast been my constant care;
Thy hands I arm'd, and sent thee forth to war:
But thee or fear deters, or sloth detains;
No drop of all thy father warms thy veins.

The chief thus answer'd mild. Immortal maid!

I own thy presence, and confess thy aid.

Not fear, thou know'st, withholds me from the plains,

Nor sloth hath seiz'd me, but thy word restrains:

From warring Gods thou bad'st me turn my spear,

And Venus only found resistance here,

Hence

Hence, Goddess! heedful of thy high commands, Loth I gave way, and warn'd our Argive bands: For Mars, the homicide, these eyes beheld, With slaughter red, and raging round the field.

90

95 nt;

005

ns

215 ice

Then thus Minerva. Brave Tydides, hear! 1020
Not Mars himself, nor ought immortal, fear.
Full on the God impel the foaming horse:
Pallas commands, and Pallas lends thee force.
Rash, furious, blind, from these to those he slies,
And every side of wavering combat tries; 1025
Large promise makes, and breaks the promise made;
Now gives the Grecians, now the Trojans aid.

She faid, and to the steeds approaching near,
Drew from his seat the martial charioteer.
The vigorous power the trembling car ascends,
Fierce for revenge; and Diomed attends.
The groaning axle bent beneath the load;
So great a Hero, and so great a God.
She snatch'd the reins, she lash'd with all her force,
And full on Mars impell'd the soaming horse:
1035
But first to hide her heavenly visage spread
Black Orcus' helmet o'er her radiant head.

Just then gigantick Periphas lay slaim,
The strongest warriour of th' Ætolian train;
The God, who slew him, leaves his prostrate prize
Stretch'd where he fell, and at Tydides slies.
Now, rushing sierce, in equal arms appear,
The daring Greek; the dreadful God of war!
Full at the chief, above his courser's head,
From Mars's arm th' enormous weapon sled;

Pallas

Pallas oppos'd her hand, and caus'd to glance Far from the car, the ftrong immortal lance. Then threw the force of Tydeus' warlike fon; The javelin his'd; the Goddess urg'd it on: Where the broad cincture girt his armour round, 1000 It pierc'd the God: his groin receiv'd the wound. From the rent skin the warriour tugs again The smoking steel. Mars bellows with the pain : Loud as the roar encountering armies yield, When shouting millions shake the thundering field. Both armies fart, and trembling gaze around; And earth and heaven rebellow to the found. As vapours bloweby Aufter's fultry breath, Pregnant with plagues, and shedding steeds of death, Beneath the rage of burning Sirius rife, 1060 Choke the parch'd earth, and blacken all the fkies; In fuch a cloud the God from combat driven, High o'er the dufty whirlwind scales the heaven. Wild with his pain, he fought the bright abodes, There fullen fat beneath the Sire of Gods, 1065 Show'd the 'celestial blood, and with a groan Thus pour'd his plaints before th' immortal throne.

Can Jove, supine, flagitious facts survey,
And brook the furies of this daring day?
For mortal men celestial powers engage,
And Gods on Gods exert eternal rage.
From thee, O father! all these ills we bear,
And thy fell daughter with the shield and spear:
Thou gav'st that sury to the realms of light,
Pernicious, wild, regardless of the right.

1075

All

All heaven beside reveres thy sovereign sway, Thy voice we hear, and thy behefts obey : 'Tis hers t' offend, and ev'n offending share Thy breaft, thy counsels, thy distinguish'd care : So boundless she, and thou so partial grown, Well may we deem the wondrous birth thy own. Now frantic Diomed, at her command, Against th's Immortals lifts his raging hand : The heavenly Venus first his fury found, Me next encountering, me he dar'd to wound; Vanquish'd I fled: ev'n I the God of fight, From mortal madness scarce was fav'd by flight. Else hadst thou seen me sink on yonder plain, Heap'd round, and heaving under loads of flain! Or, pierc'd with Grecian darts, for ages lie, 1090 Condemn'd to pain, though fated not to die.

Him thus upbraiding, with a wrathful look The Lord of thunders view'd, and stern bespoke. To me, perfidious! this lamenting strain? Of lawless force shall lawless Mars complain? 1095 Of all the Gods who tread the spangled skies, Thou most unjust, most odious in our eyes! Inhuman discord is thy dire delight, The waste of slaughter, and the rage of fight. No bound, no law, thy fiery temper quells, 1100 And all thy mother in thy foul rebels. In vain our threats, in vain our power we use; She gives th' example, and her fon pursues. Yet long th' inflicted pangs thou shalt not mourn, Sprung fince thou art from Jove, and heavenly born.

5

E!fe

POPE'S HOMER.

188

Else, sing'd with lightning hadst thou hence been thrown,

Where chain'd on burning rocks the Titans groan.

Thus he who shakes Olympus with his nod;

Then gave to Pæon's care the bleeding God.

With gentle hand the balm he pour'd around,

And heal'd th' immortal slesh, and clos'd the wound.

As when the sig's prest juice, infus'd in cream,

To curds coagulates the liquid stream,

Sudden the fluids fix, the parts combin'd;

Such, and so soon, th' ætherial texture join'd.

Cleans'd from the dust and gore, fair Hebè drest

His mighty limbs in an immortal vest.

Glorious he sat, in majesty restor'd,

Fast by the throne of heaven's superior Lord.

Juno and Pallas mount the blest abodes,

Their task perform'd, and mix among the Gods.

Six fill the a sort with a greature of a will be

The grade of flanguage, and the region of fights with the state of the

the three many and how son purification and the thought from love, and a

Induced different in the day delight.

ELARCUMEN 110 nd. The Equades of Clauses and Diamed, and of Heiter the think of the bank THE 115 THE Code brying televille held, the Greeigns prevent Helepro, the chief augus at Argy, commands life-SIXTH BOOK 20 re relea wit becomes the present proBulk course rieff. blue set as aigne egoties, policien The land is first until nother of baltle, belowed the right line and all of buy rioms buy the E

THE ARGUMENT.

The Episodes of Glaucus and Diomed, and of Hector and Andromache.

THE Gods having left the field, the Grecians prevail. Helenus, the chief augur of Troy, commands Hector to return to the city, in order to appoint a folemn procession of the queen and the Trojan matrons to the temple of Minerva, to entreat her to remove Diomed from the fight. The battle relaxing during the absence of Hector, Glaucus and Diomed have an interview between the two armies; where coming to the knowledge of the friendship and hospitality past between their ancestors, they make exchange of their arms. Hector, having performed the orders of Helenus, prevails upon Paris to return to the battle; and taking a tender leave of his wife Andromache, hastens again to the field.

The scene is first in the field of battle, between the river Simois and Scamander, and then changes to Troy.

THE

I L I A D.

BOOK VI.

N OW heaven forfakes the fight: th' immortals . yield,

To human force and human skill, the field:
Dark showers of javelins sly from foes to foes;
Now here, now there, the tide of combat flows;
While Troy's fam'd * streams, that bound the deathful plain,

On either fide run purple to the main.

for ail.

ec-

10-ons

ove

an g to past

of s of pat-

ro-

reen

ges

Great Ajax first to conquest led the way,
Broke the thick ranks, and turn'd the doubtful day.
The Thracian Acamas his falchion found,
And hew'd th' enormous giant to the ground;
His thundering arm a deadly stroke impress
Where the black horse-hair nodded o'er his cress:
Fix'd in his front the brazen weapon hies,
And seals in endless shades his swimming eyes.
Next Teuthras' son distain'd the sands with blood,
Axylus, hospitable, rich, and good:
In fair Arisbe's walls (his native place)
He held his seat; a friend to human race.
Fast by the road, his ever-open door
Oblig'd the wealthy, and reliev'd the poor.

To

· Scamander and Simois,

POPE'S HOMER.

192

To stern Tydides now he falls a prey,
No friend to guard him in the dreadful day!
Breathless the good man fell, and by his side
His faithful servant, old Calesius, dy'd.	(
By great Euryalus was Drefus flain,	25
And next he lay'd Opheltius on the plain.
Two twins were near, bold, beautiful, and yo	ung,
From a fair Naiad and Bucolion fprung:
(Laomedon's white flocks Bucolion fed,
That monarch's first-born by a foreign bed;	30
In fecret woods he won the Naiad's grace,	Y 45
And two fair infants crown'd his strong embrace	e.)
Here dead they lay in all their youthful charms;	Hatt.
The ruthless victor stripp'd their shining arms.
Aftyalus by Polypætes fell;	35
Ulyffes' spear Pidytes sent to hell;
By Teucer's shaft brave Aretaon bled,	.
And Neftor's fon laid ftern Ablerus dead;
Great Agamemnon, leader of the brave,	plora El
The mortal wound of rich Elatus gave,	40
Who held in Pedafus his proud abode,	b rzier.
And till'd the banks where filver Satnio flow'd.	Sie i
Melanthius by Eurypylus was flain;
And Phylacus from Leitus flies in vain.	31/4
Unblest Adrastus next at mercy lies	45
Beneath the Spartan spear, a living prize.	WENT !
Scar'd with the din and tumult of the fight,	(PA
His headlong steeds precipitate in flight,	1.00
Rush'd on a tamarisk's strong trunk, and broke	900
The shatter'd chariot from the crooked yoke;	50
	XXIIda

V I

I V T R A

H A SI A SI W A N SI III H A

Tie Th

Ther

Then preffing with his foot his panting heart, Forth from the flain he tugg'd the reeking dart. Old Nestor faw, and rous'd the warriour's rage; Thus, heroes! thus the vigorous combat wage! No fon of Mars descend, for servile gains, To touch the booty, while a foe remains. ~ Behold you glittering hoft, your future spoil! First gain the conquest, then reward the toil.

And now had Greece eternal fame acquir'd, And frighten'd Troy within her walls retir'd; Had not fage Helenus her state redrest, Taught by the Gods that mov'd his facred breaft. Where Hector stood, with great Æneas join'd, The feer reveal'd the counfels of his mind.

Ye generous chiefs! on whom th' immortals lay The cares and glories of this doubtful day; On whom your aids, your country's hopes depend; Wife to confult, and active to defend! Here, at our gates, your brave efforts unite, Turn back the routed, and forbid the flight; 100 Ere yet their wives' foft arms the cowards gain, The sport and infult of the hostile train. When your commands have hearten'd every band, Ourselves, here fix'd, will make the dangerous stand; Press'd as we are, and fore of former fight, 103 These straits demand our last remains of might. Meanwhile, thou Hector to the town retire, And teach our mother what the Gods require: Direct the queen to lead th' assembled train Of Troy's chief matrons to Minerva's fane; 110 sycien flected d nen in the duti-

A

B

A

I

T

N

Sp

No

In

Le

Th

Ar

W

An

Fie

All

Son

Sho

1

An

Be :

Be

One

To

Unbar the facred gates, and feek the power With offer'd vows, in Ilion's topmost tower. The largest mantle her rich wardrobes hold, Most priz'd for art, and labour'd o'er with gold, Before the Goddess' honour'd knees be spread; 115 And twelve young heifers to her altars led :-If so the power, aton'd by fervent prayer, Our wives, our infants, and our city spare, And far avert Tydides' wasteful ire, That mows whole troops, and makes all Troy retire. Not thus Achilles taught our hofts to dread, Sprung though he was from more than mortal bed; Not thus refiftless rul'd the stream of fight, In rage unbounded, and unmatch'd in might.

Hector obedient heard; and, with a bound, 125 Leap'd from his trembling chariot to the ground; Through all his hoft, inspiring force, he flies, And bids the thunder of the battle rife. With rage recruited the bold Trojans glow, And turn the tide of conflict on the foe: Fierce in the front he shakes two dazling spears: All Greece recedes, and 'midft her triumphs fears, Some God, they thought, who rul'd the fate of wars Shot down avenging, from the vault of stars.

Then thus, aloud. Ye dauntless Dardans, hear! And you whom distant nations send to war! Be mindful of the strength your fathers bore; Be still yourselves, and Hector asks no more. One hour demands me in the Trojan wall, To bid our altars flame, and victims fall :

140

Nor shall, I trust, the matrons holy train.

And reverend elders, seek the Gods in vain.

This faid, with ample strides the hero past;
The shield's large orb behind his shoulder cast,
His neck o'ershading, to his ancle hung;
And as he march'd, the brazen buckler rung.

Now paus'd the battle (godlike Hector gone)
When daring Glaucus and great Tydeus' fon
Between both armies met: the chief's from far
Observ'd each other, and had mark'd for war.
Near as they drew, Tydides thus began.

What art thou, boldest of the race of man? Our eyes, till now, that aspect ne'er beheld, Where fame is reap'd amid th' embattled field; Yet far before the troops thou dar'ft appear, And meet a lance the fiercest heroes fear. Unhappy they, and born of luckless fires, Who tempt our fury when Minerva fires! But if from heaven, celeftial thou descend; Know, with immortals we no more contend. Not long Lycurgus view'd the golden light, That daring man who mix'd with Gods in fight. Bacchus, and Bacchus' votaries, he drove, With brandish'd steel from Nyssa's sacred grove: Their confecrated spears lay scatter'd round, With curling vines and twifted ivy bound; While Bacchus headlong fought the briny flood, And Thetis' arm receiv'd the trembling God. Nor fail'd the crime th' immortals' wrath to move. (Th' immortals bleft with endless ease above) 170 Di Ci

I b Sul Bo

Ap

(Re Lik

An

So g So f But

The

Æo In a The Great Who

The

Wit

Depriv'd

Depriv'd of fight by their avenging doom,
Chearless he breath'd, and wander'd in the gloom:
Then sunk unpity'd to the dire abodes,
A wretch accurst, and hated by the Gods!
I brave not heaven: but if the fruits of earth
Sustain thy life, and human be thy birth;
Bold as thou art, too prodigal of breath,
Approach, and enter the dark gates of death.

What, or from whence I am, or who my fire,
(Reply'd the chief) can Tydeus' fon enquire?

Like leaves on trees the race of man is found,
Now green in youth, now withering on the ground;
Another race the following fpring supplies;
They fall successive, and successive rise:
So generations in their course decay;
So flourish these, when those are past away.
But if thou still persist to search my birth,
Then hear a tale that fills the spacious earth.

A city stands on Argos' utmost bound,
(Argos the fair for warlike steeds renown'd)

Eolian Sisyphus, with wisdom blest,
In ancient time the happy walls possest,
Then call'd Ephyre: Glaucus was his son;
Great Glaucus, father of Bellerophon,
Who o'er the sons of men in beauty shin'd,
Lov'd for that valour which preserves mankind.
Then mighty Prætus Argos' sceptres sway'd,
Whose hard commands Bellerophon obey'd.
With direful jealousy the monarch rag'd,
And the brave prince in numerous toils engag'd.

For 195,

0 3

For him Antæa burn'd with lawlefs flame, And strove to tempt him from the paths of fame In vain she tempted the relentless youth, Endued with wisdom, sacred fear, and truth. Fir'd at his fcorn the queen to Prætus fled, And begg'd revenge for her infulted bed : Incens'd he heard, refolving on his fate; But hospitable laws restrain'd his hate: To Lycia the devoted youth he fent, With tablets feal'd, that told his dire intent. 210 Now, bleft by every power who guards the good, The chief arriv'd at Xanthus' filver flood: There Lycia's monarch paid him honours due, Nine days he feasted, and nine bulls he slew. But when the tenth bright morning orient glow'd, 215 The faithful youth his monarch's mandate show'd: The fatal tablets, till that inftant feal'd, The deathful fecret to the king reveal'd. First, dire Chimæra's conquest was enjoin'd: A mingled monster, of no mortal kind; 220 Behind, a dragon's fiery tail was foread; A goat's rough body bore a lion's head; Her pitchy nostrils flaky flames expire; Her gaping throat emits infernal fire.

This pest he slaughter'd (for he read the skies, 225
And trusted heaven's informing prodigies)
Then met in arms the Solymæan crew,
(Fiercest of men) and those the warriour slew.
Next the bold Amazon's whole force defy'd;
And conquer'd still, for heaven was on his side. 230

Nor

W

T

H

W

T

W

T

W

(F

Cr

Bu

Fo

W

A

W

Hi

Hi:

Hi

By

By

To

To

Bef

An

Nor ended here his toils: his Lycian foes
At his return, a treacherous ambush rose,
With level'd spears along the winding shore;
There fell they breathless, and return'd no more.

At length the monarch with repentant grief Confess'd the Gods, and God-descended chief; His daughter gave, the stranger to detain, With half the honours of nis ample reign: The Lycians grant a chosen space of ground, With woods, with vineyards, and with harvests crown'd. There long the chief his happy lot poffes'd. With two brave fons and one fair daughter blefs'd; (Fair ev'n in heavenly eyes; her fruitful love Crown'd with Sarpedon's birth th' embrace of Jove) But when at last, distracted in his mind, Forfook by heaven, forfaking human kind, Wide o'er th' Aleian field he chose to stray, A long, forlorn, uncomfortable way! Woes heap'd on woes confum'd his wasted heart; His beauteous daughter fell by Phæbe's dart; His eldest-born by raging Mars was slain, In combat on the Solymean plain. Hippolochus furviv'd; from him I came. The honour'd author of my birth and name; By his decree I fought the Trojan town, 255 By his instructions learn to win renown, To stand the first in worth as in command, To add new honours to my native land, Before my eyes my mighty fires to place, And emulate the glories of our race. 0.4

He spoke, and transport fill'd Tydides' heart; In earth the generous warriour fix'd his dart, Then friendly, thus, the Lycian prince addrest : Welcome, my brave hereditary guest! Thus ever let us meet, with kind embrace, 265 Nor stain the facred friendship of our race. Know, chief, our grandfires have been guests of old Oeneus the ftrong, Bellerophon the bold: Our ancient feat his honour'd presence grac'd, Where twenty days in genial rites he pass'd. 270 The parting deroes mutual prefents left; A golden goblet was thy grandfire's gift; Oeneus a belt of matchless work bestow'd, That rich with Tyrian dye refulgent glow'd. (This from his pledge I learn'd, which fafely ftor'd Among my treasures, still adorns my board: For Tydeus left me young, when Thebe's wall Beheld the fons of Greece untimely fall.) Mindful of this, in friendship let us join; If heaven our steps to foreign lands incline, My guest in Argos theu, and I in Lycia thine. Enough of Trojans to this lance shall yield, In the full harvest of you ample field; Enough of Greeks shall dye thy spear with gore; But thou and Diomed be foes no more. Now change we arms, and prove to either hoft We guard the friendship of the line we boast.

Thus having faid, the gallant chiefs alight, Their hands they join, their mutual faith they plight; Brave Glaucus then each narrow thought relign'd, (Jove warm'd his bosom and enlarg'd his mind:

For

Fo

H

Be

F

R

OT

In

OT

0

H

0

(

Si

For Diomed's brass arms, of mean device, For which nine oxen paid, (a vulgar price;) He gave his own, of gold divinely wrought, A hundred beeves the shining purchase bought. 299

Meantime the guardian of the Trojan state, Great Hector, enter d at the Screan gate. Beneath the beech-tree's confecrated fhades, The Trojan matrons and the Trojan maids Around him flock'd, all press'th with pious care 300 For husbands, brothers, fons, engag'd in war. He bids the train in long procession go,
And seek the Gods t' avert the impending woe. And now to Priam's flately courts he came, Rais'd on arch'd columns of flupendous frame; 305 O'er these a range of marble structure runs, The rich pavilions of his fifty fons, In fifty chambers lodg'd: and rooms of state Oppos'd to those, where Priam's daughters fat: Twelve domes for them and their lov'd spouses shone, Of equal beauty, and of polish'd store. Hither great Hector pass'd, nor pass'd unseen Of royal Hecuba, his mother queen. (With her Laodice, whose beauteous face Surpass'd the nymphs of Troy's illustrious race): 315 Long in a strict embrace she held her fon,

And press'd his hand, and tender thus begun. O Hector! fay, what great occasion calls My fon from fight, when Greece furrounds our walls? Com'ft thou to supplicate th' almighty power, 320 With lifted hands from Ilion's lofty tower?

Stay,

Stay, till I bring the cup with Bacchus crown'd, In Jove's high name, to sprinkle on the ground, And pay due vows to all the Gods around. Then with a plenteous draught refresh thy soul, And draw new spirits from the generous bowl; Spent as thou art with long laborious fight, The brave defender of thy country's right. Far hence be Bacchus' gifts (the chief rejoin'd:) Inflaming wine, pernicious to mankind, 330 Unnerves the limbs, and dulls the noble mind. Let chiefs abstain, and spare the facred juice To sprinkle to the Gods, its better use. By me that holy office were profan'd; Ill fits it me, with human gore distain'd, To the pure skies these horrid hands to raise, Or offer heaven's great Sire polluted praise. You with your matrons, go! a spotless train, And burn rich odours in Minerva's fane. The largest mantle your full wardrobes hold, 340 Most priz'd for art, and labour'd o'er with gold, Before the Goddess' honour'd knees be spread, And twelve young heifers to her altar led. So may the power, aton'd by fervent prayer, Our wives, our infants, and our city spare, And far avert Tydides' wasteful ire, Who mows whole troops, and makes all Troy retire. Be this, O mother, your religious care; I go to rouse soft Paris to the war; If yet, not loft to all the fense of shame, 350 The recreant warriour hear the voice of fame,

Oh

T

D

T

Ea

T

W

T

Sic

W

W

H

T

Sh

A

H

T

So

A

A

A

W

T

T

Pl

T

Br

Pr

Oh would kind earth the hateful wretch embrace,
That pest of Troy, that ruin of our race!
Deep to the dark about might he descend,
Troy yet should flourish, and my forrows end.

This heard, the gave command; and fummon'd came Each noble matron and illustrious dame. The Phrygian queen to her rich wardrobe went, Where treasur'd odours breath'd a costly scent. There lay the vestures of no vulgar art, Sidonian maids embroider'd every part, Whom from foft Sidon youthful Paris bore, With Helen touching on the Tyrian flore. Here as the queen revolv'd with careful eyes The various textures and the various dyes, She chose a veil that shone superiour far; And glow'd refulgent as the morning star. Herself with this the long procession leads; The train majestically slow proceeds. Soon as to Ilion's topmost tower they come, And awful reach the high Palladian dome, Antenor's confort, fair Theano, waits As Pallas' priesters, and unbars the gates. With hands uplifted and imploring eyes, They fill the dome with fupplicating cries. The priestess then the shining veil displays, Plac'd on Minerva's knees, and thus she prays. Oh awful goddess! ever-dreadful maid,

Oh awful goddess! ever-dreadful maid, Troy's strong defence, unconquer'd Pallas, aid! Break thou Tydides' spear, and let him fall Prone on the dust before the Trojan wall.

So

So twelve young heifers, guiltless of the yoke, Shall fill thy temple with a grateful smoke. But thou, aton'd by penitence and prayer, Ourselves, our infants, and our city spare! 385 So pray'd the priestess in her holy fane; So vow'd the matrons, but they vow'd in vain. While these appear before the power with prayers, Hector to Paris' lofty dome repairs. Himself the mansion rais'd, from every part Affembling architects of matchless art. Near Priam's court and Hector's palace stands

The pompous structure, and the town commands. A spear the hero bore of wondrous strength, Of full ten cubits was the lance's length, The fleely point with golden ringlets join'd, Before him brandish'd, at each motion shin'd. Thus entering, in the glittering rooms he found His brother-chief, whose useless arms lay round,

His eyes delighting with their splendid show, Brightening the shield, and polishing the bow. Befide him Helen with her virgins stands, Guides their rich labours, and instructs their hands.

Him thus una live, with an ardent look The prince behelf, and high resenting spoke. 405 Thy hate to Tro is this the time to show? (Oh wretch ill-fated, and thy country's foe!) Paris and Greece against us, both conspire; Thy close resentment, and their vengeful ire. For thee great Ilion's guardian heroes fall, 410 Till heaps of dead along defend her wall;

For

400

U

0

T

H

r

B

.0

T

H

T

W

Bo

For thee the foldier bleeds, the matron mourns, And wasteful war in all its fury burns. Ungrateful man! deserves not this thy care, Our troops to hearten, and our toils to share?

Rife, or behold the conquering flames afcend, And all the Phrygian glories at an end.

Brother, 'tis just (reply'd the beauteous youth)
Thy free remonstrance proves thy worth and truth:
Yet charge my absence less, oh generous chief!
Yet charge my absence less, oh generous chief!
On hate to Troy, than conscious shame and grief:
Here, hid from human eyes, thy brother sat,
And mourn'd in secret, his and Ilion's fate.
'Tis now enough: now glory spreads her charms,
And beauteous Helen calls her chief to arms.

Conquest to-day my happier sword may bless,
'Tis man's to fight, but heaven's to give success.

But while I arm, contain thy ardent mind;
Or go, and Paris shall not lag behind.

He faid, nor answer'd Priam's warlike son; 430

Oh generous brother! if the guilty dame,
That caus'd these woes, deserve a sister's name!
Would heaven, ere all these dreadful deeds were done,
The day, that show'd me to the golden sun,
Had seen my death! Why did not whirlwinds bear
The fatal infant to the sowls of air?
Why sunk I not beneath the whelming tide,
And 'midst the roarings of the waters died?
Heaven fill'd up all my ills, and I accurst
Bore all, and Paris of those ills the worst.

Helen

Helen at least a braver spouse might claim, Warm'd with some virtue, some regard of fame! Now, tir'd with toils, thy fainting limbs recline, With toils, fustain'd for Paris' fake and mine: 445 The Gods have link'd our miserable doom, . Our present woe, and infamy to come : I all the Wide shall it spread, and last through ages long. Example fad! and theme of future fong. The chief reply'd: This time forbids to rest: 450 The Trojan bands, by hostile fury prest, Demand their Hector, and his arm require; The combat urges, and my foul's on fire. Urge thou thy knight to march where glory calls, And timely join me, ere I leave the walls. 455 Ere yet I mingle in the direful fray, My wife, my infant, claim a moment's stay; This day (perhaps the last that sees me here) Demands a parting word, a tender tear: This day, fome God who hates our Trojan land 460 May vanquish Hector by a Grecian hand. He faid, and past with fad presaging heart To feek his spouse, his soul's far dearer part; At home he fought her, but he fought in vain : She, with one maid of all her menial train, 465 Had thence retir'd; and with her fecond joy, The young Astyanax, the hope of Troy, Penfive she stood on Ilion's towery height, Beheld the war, and ficken'd at the fight; There her fad eyes in vain her lord explore, 470 Or weep the wounds her bleeding country bore,

But

V

H

W

0

N

T

T

T

SI

D

Fe

T

T

Sv

T

W

H

((

A

T

H

W

Fa

T

Sc

ILIAD, BOOK VI.

207

But he who found not whom his foul defir'd, Whose virtue charm'd him as her beauty fir'd, Stood in the gates, and ask'd what way she bent Her parting step? If to the fane she went, Where late the mourning matrons made refort; Or fought her fifters in the Trojan court? Not to the court, (reply'd th' attendant train) Nor mix'd with matrons to Minerva's fane: To Ilion's steepy tower she bent her way, To mark the fortunes of the doubtful day. Troy fled, fhe heard, before the Grecian fword; She heard, and trembled for her abfent lord : Distracted with furprise, she seem'd to fly, Fear on her cheek, and forrow in her eye. The nurse attended with her infant boy, The young Aftyanax, the hope of Troy.

Hector, this heard, return'd without delay; Swift through the town he trod his former way, Through streets of palaces, and walks of state; And met the mourner at the Scæan gate. With hafte to meet him fprung the joyful fair, His blameless wife, Action's wealthy heir: (Cilician Thebè great Aëtion sway'd, And Hippoplacus' wide extended shade) The nurse stood near, in whose embraces prest His only hope hung smiling at her breast, Whom each foft charm and early grace adorn, Fair as the new-born star that gilds the morn. To this lov'd infant Hector gave the name Scamandrius, from Scamander's honour'd ffream;

Aftyanax

Astyanax the Trojans call'd the boy,
From his great father, the defence of Troy.
Silent the warriour smil'd, and pleas'd resign'd
To tender passions all his mighty mind:
His beauteous princess cast a mournful look,
Hung on his hand, and then dejected spoke;
Her bosom labour'd with a boding sigh,
And the big tear stood trembling in her eye.

Too daring prince! ah, whether dost thou run? Ah, too forgetful of thy wife and fon! And think'ft thou not how wretched we shall be, A widow I, an helpless orphan he! For fure fuch courage length of life denies; And thou must fall, thy virtue's sacrifice. Greece in her fingle heroes strove in vain; Now hofts oppose thee, and thou must be slain! Oh grant me, Gods! ere Hector meets his doom, All I can ask of heaven, an early tomb! So shall my days in one fad tenour run, 520 And end with forrows as they first begun. No parent now remains my griefs to share, No father's aid, no mother's tender care. The fierce Achilles wrapt our walls in fire, Laid Thebè wafte, and flew my warlike fire! His fate compassion in the victor bred; Stern as he was, he yet rever'd the dead, His radiant arms preserv'd from hostile spoil, And laid him decent on the funeral pile; Then rais'd a mountain where his bones were burn'd: The mountain nymphs the rural tomb adorn'd,

Jove's

T

0

I

N

Yove's Tylvan daughters bade their elms bestow A barren shade, and in his honour grow.

By the same arm my seven brave brothers fell; In one fad day beheld the gates of hell: While the fat herds and snowy flocks they fed; Amid their fields the hapless heroes bled ! My mother live to bear the victor's bands, The queen of Hippoplacia's fylvan lands: Redeem'd too late, she scakee beheld again Her pleasing empire and her native plain, When ah! opprest by life-confuming woe, She fell a victim to Diana's bow.

Yet, while my Hector still survives, I see : My father, mother, brethren, all, in thee: Alas! my parents, brothers, kindred, all Once more will perish, if my Hector fall. Thy wife, thy infant, in thy danger hare: Oh prove a husband's and a father's care! That quarter most the skilful Greeks annoy, Where you wild fig-trees join the wall of Troy: Thou from this tower defend th' important post; There Agamemnon points his dreadful hoft, That pass Tydides, Ajax, strive to gain, And there the vengeful Spartan fires his train. Thrice our bold foes the fierce attack have given,. Or led by hopes, or dictated from heaven. Let others in the field their arms employ, But stay my Hector here, and guard his Troy.

The chief reply'd: That post shall be my care, Not that alone, but all the works of war.

VOL. I. Lyuis laterante Porn

How would the fons of Troy, in arms renown'd,
And Troy's proud dames, whose garments sweep the ground,
Attaint the lustre of my former name,
Should Hector basely quit the field of fame?

565

Should Hector basely quit the field of same?
My early youth was bred to martial pains,
My soul impels me toth' embattled plains:
Let me be foremost to defend the throne,

And guard my father's glories, and my own.

Yet come it will, the day decreed by fates:

(How my heart trembles while my tongue relates!)
The day when thou, imperial Troy! must bend,
And see thy warriours fall, thy glories end.
And yet no dire presage so wounds my mind,
My mother's death, the ruin of my kind,

575
Not Priam's hoary hairs defil'd with gore,

Not all my brothers gasping on the shore; As thine, Andromache! thy griefs I dread; I see thee trembling, weeping, captive led!

In Argive looms our battles to defign, And woes, of which so large a part was thine!

To bear the victor's hard commands, or bring The weight of waters from Hyperia's spring. There, while you groan beneath the load of life,

They cry, Behold the mighty Hector's wife! . Some haughty Greek, who lives thy tears to see,

Embitters all thy woes, by naming me.

The thoughts of glory past, and present shame, A thousand griefs shall waken at the name!

May I lie cold before that dreadful day, .

Pres'd with a load of monumental clay!

Thy

590

580

585

Thy Hector, wrapt in everlasting sleep, Shall neither hear thee figh, nor see thee weep.

Thus having spoke, th' illustrious chief of Troy
Stretch'd his fond arms to class the lovely boy.

The babe clung crying to his nurse's breast,
Scar'd at the dazling helm, and nodding crest.
With secret pleasure each fond parent smil'd,
And Hector hasted to relieve his child,
The glittering terrours from his brows unbound, 600
And plac'd the beaming helmet on the ground.
Then kis'd the child, and, listing high in air,
Thus to the Gods preferr'd a father's prayer.

O thou! whose glory fills th' æthereal throne,
And all ye deathless powers! protect my son! 605
Grant him, like me, to purchase just renown,
To guard the Trojans, to defend the crown,
Against his country's foes the war to wage,
And rise the Hector of the future age!
So when triumphant from successful toils
Of heroes slain he bears the reeking spoils,
Whole hosts may hail him with deserv'd acclaim,
And say, this chief transcends his father's same!
While pleas'd, amidst the general shouts of Troy,
His mother's conscious heart o'erslows with joy.

615

He spoke, and fondly gazing on her charms,
Restor'd the pleasing burthen to her arms;
Soft on her fragrant breast the babe she laid,
Hush'd to repose; and with a smile survey'd.
The troubled pleasure soon chastis'd by fear,
She mingled with a smile a tender tear.

Piz

The

The foften'd chief with kind compation view'd, And dry'd the falling drops, and thus purfued.

Andromache! my foul's far better part,

Why with untimely forrows heaves thy heart?

No hoftile hand can antedate my doom,

Till fate condemns me to the filent tomb.

Fix'd is the term to all the race of earth;

And fuch the hard condition of our birth,

No force can then refift, no flight can fave;

All fink alike, the fearful and the brave.

No more—but haften to thy tasks at home,

There guide the spindle, and direct the loom:

Me glory summons to the martial scene,

The field of combat is the sphere for men.

635

Where heroes war, the foremost place I claim,

The first in danger, as the first in fame.

Thus having faid, the glorious chief refumes.

His towery helmet, black with shading plumes.

His princess parts with a prophetic sigh, 640

Unwilling parts, and oft reverts her eye,

That stream'd at every look: then moving slow,

Sought her own palace, and indulg'd her woe.

There, while her tears deplor'd the god-like man,

Through all her train the soft infection ran, 645

The pious maids their mingled forrows shed,

And mourn the living Hector, as the dead.

But now, no longer deaf to honour's call,

Forth iffues Paris from the palace wall.

In brazen arms that cast a gleamy ray,

Swift through the town the warriour bends his way.

The

ILIAD, BOOK VI.

The wanton courser thus, with reins unbound,
Breaks from his stall, and beats the trembling ground;
Pamper'd and proud, he seeks the wonted tides,
And laves, in height of blood, his shining sides;
And laves, in height of blood, his shining sides;
His head now freed, he tosses to the skies;
His mane dishevel'd o'er his shoulders slies;
He snuffs the somales in the distant plain,
And springs, extilting, to his fields again.
With equal triumph, sprightly, bold, and gay,
Some stalling in his might,
Rush'd forth with Hector to the fields of sight.

And now the warriours passing on the way,
The graceful Paris sirst excus'd his stay.

The graceful Paris first excus'd his stay.

To whom the noble Hector thus reply'd:

O chief! in blood, and now in arms, ally'd!

Thy power in war with justice none contest;

Known is thy courage, and thy strength confest.

What pity sloth should seize a soul so brave,

Or god-like Paris live a woman's slave!

My heart weeps blood at what the Trojans say,

And hopes, thy deeds shall wipe the stain away.

Haste then, in all their glorious labours share;

For much they suffer, for thy sake, in war.

These ills shall cease, whene'er by Jove's decree

We crown the bowl to Heaven and Liberty:

While the proud soe his frustrate triumphs mourns,

And Greece indignant through her seas returns.

075

670

213

PHV upoli (G/ALL) The wanten court thus, with rein unioundaried out Private Post bie dati, and begin trinshing grounds. And lawer on treate the police to the fine state of an about the He mane delice of he out begins dieng a state ... The thought the forested in the Althur playing out the life and And fprings, taulting, today belds agained de di long With equal selecapitation with the and gray, a factor of the at and date, dayther God of days, was been the the ion of Friend, whereing in his dright, the court has hand form with Hickor to the helds of highly and And now the mariours passing on the war, the att the grace of the confidences of his states and the states to which the noise liestor than it distant south that the O chief in cheef, and new in arms gally device at a The power in war with billiosuous consecution and Known is the contage, shall the facing the conference of that give there we deliver a feet of the west of the best of The state of the s anager of and stanger to be of Toyong that all. the byests from the sque that wood you vegod beat. La plan and est ensured while the all and shall for much they fallet, for the this of in ward have to g Then the find series where er by seven degrees to Then the grown the beest to Helven and Liberty: Wills the proof for life fields at any car out of W And Cover leading and through her lies a recent

in the state of respect of the state of the THE TATALORE HAS DON A LONG wit at and the

THE SHOOL

Thannak of his an an inferior sealor with the distribution of the first of the first the compared openings a plant of the control open ation materially risk the manufactor is also be

SEVENTH BOOK

215 mg - 1

Englished to them man delider so his OF THE to you the star we also are pales of the dame that more a guar a vel beniant at 284 a . The same of the and the bar to and the entry it in some title and one found in balding the second resident arvugiak at kord sayat sayat tempunga salakski 🖫 🖫 the think at the control of the think of the han the but below to consider of

Are at milestry assess LI

THE ARGUMENT.

The fingle Combat of Hector and Ajax.

THE battle renewing with double ardour upon the rethrn of Hector, Minerva is under apprehensions for the Greeks. Apollo, keing her descend from Olympus, joins her near the Scaan gate, they agree to put off the general engagement for that day, and incite Hector to challenge the Greeks to a fingle combat. Nine of the princes accepting the challenge, the let is cast, and falls upon Ajax. These heroes, after teveral attacks, are parted by the night. The Trojans calling a council, Antenor proposes the delivery of Helen to the Greeks, to which Paris will not content, but offers to restore them her riches. Priam fends a herald to make this offer, and to demand a truce for burning the dead, the last of which only is agreed to by Agamemnon. When the funerals are performed, the Greeks, pursuant to the advice of Neftor, erect a fortification to protect their fleet and camp, flanked with towers, and defended by a ditch and palifades. Neptune testifies his joaloufy at this work, but is pacified by a promise from Jupiter. Both armies pais the night in feaffing, but Jupiter disheartens the Trojans with thunder and other figns of his wrath.

The three and twentieth day ends with the duel of Hector and Ajax: the next day the truce is agreed: another is taken up in the funeral rites of the flain; and one more in building the fortification before the fluips. So that somewhat above three days is employed in this book. The scene lies wholly in the field.

When now Vincent tow her Argise's flain,

minic of T Ha Bar pagament her more

ILIAD.

BOOK VII.

So spoke the guardian of the Trojan state,

Then rush'd impetuous through the Scæan gate.

Him Paris follow'd to the dire alarms;

Both breathing slaughter, both resolv'd in arms.

As when to sailors labouring through the main,

That long had heav'd the weary oar in vain,

Jove bids at length th' expected gales arise;

The gales blow grateful, and the vessel slies:

So welcome these to Troy's desiring train;

The bands are chear'd, the war awakes again.

Bold Paris first the work of death begun.
On great Menestheus, Areithous' son:
Sprung from the fair Philomeda's embrace,
The pleasing Arnè was his native place.
Then sunk Eioneus to the shades below,
Beneath his steely casque he felt the blow,
Full on his neck, from Hector's weighty hand;
And roll'd, with simbs relax'd, along the land.
By Glaucus' spear the bold Iphinous bleeds,
Fix'd in the shoulder as he mounts his steeds;
Headlong he tumbles: his slack nerves unbound,
Drop the cold useless members on the ground.

When

25

35

50

1

I

7

When now Minerva saw her Argives slain, From vast Olympus to the gleaming plain Fierce she descends: Apollo mark'd her slight, Nor shot less swift from Ilion's towery height: Radiant they met, beneath the beechen shade; When thus Apollo to the blue-ey'd maid.

What cause, O daughter of almighty Jove!
Thus wings thy progress from the realms above?
Once more impetuous dost thou bend thy way,
To give to Greece the long-divided day?
Too much has Troy already felt thy hate,
Now breathe thy rage, and hush the stern debate:
This day, the business of the field suspend;
War soon shall kindle, and great Ilion bend;
Since vengeful Goddesses confederate join
To raze her walls, though built by hands divine.

To whom the progeny of Jove replies:

I left, for this, the council of the skies:

But who shall bid conslicting hosts forbear,

What art shall calm the furious sons of war?

To her the God: Great Hector's soul incite

To dare the boldest Greek to single sight,

Till Greece, provok'd, from all her numbers show,

A warriour worthy to be Hector's foe.

At this agreed, the heavenly powers withdrew; Sage Helenus their febret counfels knew: Hector, inspir'd, he sought: to him addrest, Thus told the dictates of his sacred breast. O son of Priam! let thy faithful ear Receive my words; thy friend and brother hear!

Go forth perfuaffve, and a while engage The warring nations to fuspend their rage; Then dare the boldest of the hostile train To mortal combat on the listed plain. For not this day shall end thy glorious date, The Gods have spoke it, and their voice is fate. He faid: the warriour heard the word with joy; Then with his spear reftrain'd the youth of Troy, Held by the midft athwart. On either hand The fquadrons part; th' expecting Trojans stand: Great Agamemnon bids the Greeks forbear; They breathe, and hush the tumult of the war. Th' Athenian Maid, and glorious God of day, With filent joy the fettling hofts furvey: In form of vultures, on the beech's height They fit conceal'd, and wait the future fight.

The thronging troops obscure the dusky fields,
Horrid with bristling spears, and gleaming shields. 70
As when a general darkness veils the main,
(Soft Zephyr curling the wide watery plain)
The waves scarce heave, the face of ocean sleeps,
And a still horrour saddens all the deeps:
Thus in thick orders settling wide around,
At length compos'd they sit, and shade the ground.
Great Hector first amidst both armies broke

The folemn filence, and their powers bespoke.

Hear, all ye Trojan, all ye Grecian bands,

What my foul prompts, and what some God commands.

Great Jove, averse our warfare to compose, O'erwhelms the nations with new toils and woes;

War

War with a fiercer tide once more returns, Till Ilion falls, or till you navy burns. You then, O princes of the Greeks! appear; Fis Hector speaks, and calls the Gods to hear From all your troops select the boldest knight, And him, the boldest, Hector dares to fight. Here if I fall, by chance of battle flain, Be his my spoil, and his these arms remain; But let my body, to my friends return'd, By Trojan hands and Trojan flames be burn'd. And if Apollo, in whose aid I trust, Shall stretch your daring champion in the dust: If mine the glory to despoil the foe; On Phoebus' temple I'll his arms bestow; The breathless carcals to your navy fent, Greece on the shore shall raise a monument; Which when some future mariner surveys, Wash'd by broad Hellespont's resounding seas, Thus shall he fay, " A valiant Greek lies there, " By Hector flain, the mighty man of war." The stone shall tell your vanquish'd hero's name, And distant ages learn the victor's fame.

This fierce defiance Greece aftonish'd heard, Blush'd to refuse, and to accept it fear'd. Stern Menelaus first the filence broke, And, inly groaning, thus opprobrious spoke.

Women of Greece! Oh scandal of your race, Whose coward souls your manly form disgrace. How great the shame, when every age shall know That not a Grecian met this noble foe!

20

Ì

E

1

A

0

G

E

·A

Si

G

T

TI

Co

So

191

He

No His

95

TOO

Go then, resolve to earth, from whence ye grew,

A heartless, spiritless, inglorious crew!

Be what ye seem, unanimated clay!

Myself will dare the danger of the day.

Tis man's hold task the generous strife to try,

But in the hands of God is victory.

These words searce spoke, with generous ardour

His manly limbs in azure arms he dreft: That day, Atrides! a superiour hand Had ftretch'd thee breathless on the hostile strand, But all at once, thy fury to compose, The kings of Greece, an awful band, arose : Ev'n he their chief, great Agamemnon, press'd Thy daring hand, and this advice address'd. Whither, O Menelaiis! wouldft thou run, And tempt a fate, which prudence bids thee flun? Griev'd though thou art, forbear the rash design; Great Hector's arm is mightier far than thine. Ev'n fierce Achilles learn'd its force to fear, And trembling met this dreadful fon of war. Sit thou secure amidst thy focial band; Greece in our cause shall arm some powerful hand. The mightiest warriour of th' Achaian name, Though bold, and burning with defire of fame, Content, the doubtful honour might forego, So great the danger, and fo brave the foe.

He faid, and turn'd his brother's vengeful mind;
He stoop'd to reason, and his rage resign'd,
No longer bent to rush on certain harms;
His joyful friends unbrace his azure arms.

He, from whose lips divine persuasion flows, Grave Neftor, then, in graceful act arose. Thus to the kings he spoke. What grief, what shame Attend on Greece; and all the Grecian name! How shall, alas! her hoary heroes mourn Their fons degenerate, and their race a fcorn? What tears shall down thy filver beard be roll do Oh Peleus, old in arms, in wisdom old! Once with what joy the generous prince would hear Of every chief who fought this glorious war; Participate their fame, and pleas'd enquire Each name, each action, and each hero's fire! Gods! should he see our warriours trembling stand; And trembling all before one hostile hand; How would he lift his aged arms on high, Lament inglorious Greece, and beg to die! Oh! would to all th' immortal powers above, Minerva, Phœbus, and almighty Jove!-Years might again roll back, my youth renew, And give this arm the fpring which once it knew : When, fierce in war, where Jardan's waters fall I led my troops to Phea's trembling wall, And with th' Arcadian spears my prowess try'd, 165 Where Celadon folls down his rapid tide. There Ereuthalion brav'd us in the field, Proud, Areithous' dreadful arms to wield; Great Areithous, known from thore to thore By the huge, knotted, iron mace he bore; No lance he shook, nor bent the twanging bow, But broke, with this, the battle of the foe. Him

ILIAD, BOOK VH.

Him not by manly force Lycurgus flew, Whose guileful javelin from the thicket flew, Deep in a winding way his breast affail'd, Nor aught the warrious's thundering mace avail'd. Supine he fell: those arms which Mars before Had given the vanquish'd, now the victor bore: But when old age had dimm'd Lycurgus' eyes, To Ereuthalion he confign'd the prize. Furious with this, he crush'd our level'd bands, And dar'd the trial of the strongest hands ; Nor could the strongest hands his fury stay; All faw, and fear'd, his huge tempestuous sway. Till I, the youngest of the host, appear'd, And, youngest, met whom all our army fear'd. I fought the chief: my arms Minerva crown'd: Prone fell the giant o'er a, length of ground. What then he was, Oh were your Nestor now! Not Hector's felf should want an equal foe. But, warriours, you, that youthful vigour boaft, The flower of Greece, th' examples of our hoft, Sprung from such fathers, who such numbers sway, Can you ffand trembling, and defert the day?

His warm reproofs the liftening kings inflame;
And nine, the nobleft of the Grecian name;
Up-started fierce: but far before the rest
The king of men advanc'd his dauntless breast:
Then bold Tydides, great in arms, appear'd;
And next his bulk gigantic Ajax rear'd:
Oileus follow'd; Idomen was there,
And Merion dreadful as the God of war:

With

With these Eurypylus and Thoas stand,
And wise Ulysses clos'd the daring band.
All these, alike inspir'd with noble rage,
Demand the fight. To whom the Pylian sage:
Lest thirst of glory your brave souls divide;
What chief shall combat, let the lots decide.
Whom heaven shall chuse, be his the chance to raise

His country's fame, his own immortal praise.

The lots produc'd, each hero figns his own;
Then in the general's helm the fates are thrown.
The people pray, with lifted eyes and hands,
And vows like these ascend from all the bands.
Grant, thou Almighty! in whose hand is fate,
A worthy champion for the Grecian state.
This task let Ajax or Tydides prove,
Or he, the king of kings, belov'd by Jove!

Old Nestor shook the casque. By heaven inspired,
Leap'd forth the lot, of every Greek desired.

This from the right to lest the herald bears,
Held out in order to the Grecian peers;
Each to his rival yields the mark unknown,
Till godlike Ajax sinds the lot his own;
Surveys the inscription with rejoicing eyes,

225
Then casts before him, and with transport cries:

Warriours! I claim the lot, and arm with joy;
Be mine the conquest of this chief of Troy.

Now, while my brightest arms my limbs invest,
To Saturn's son be all your vows addrest:

230

But pray in secret, less the foes should hear,
And deem your prayers the mean effect of fear.

Said

1

H

H

T

A

E

F

210

Said I in secret? No, your vows declare,
In such a voice as fills the earth and air.
Lives there a chief whom Ajax ought to dread,
Ajax, in all the toils of battle bred?
From warlike Salamis I drew my birth,
And, born to combats, fear no force on earth.

He faid. The troops with elevated eyes,
Implore the God whose thunder rends the skies.
O father of mankind, superiour Lord!
On lofty Ida's holy hill ador'd;
Who in the highest heaven hast fix'd thy throne,
Supreme of Gods! unbounded and alone:
Grant thou, that Telamon may bear away
The praise and conquest of this doubtful day;
Or if illustrious Hector be thy care,
That both may claim it, and that both may share.

Now Ajax brac'd his dazling armour on;
Sheath'd in bright steel the giant-warriour shone: 250
He moves to combat with majestic pace;
So stalks in arms the grizly God of Thrace,
When Jove to punish faithless men prepares,
And gives whole nations to the waste of wars.
Thus march'd the chief, tremendous as a God: 255
Grimly he smil'd; earth trembled as he strode:
His massy javelin quivering in his hand,
He stood, the bulwark of the Grecian band.
Through every Argive heart new transport ran;
All Troy stood trembling at the mighty man: 260
Ev'n Hector paus'd; and, with new doubt opprest,
Felt his great heart suspended in his breast:

VOL. I.

Twas

'Twas vain to feek retreat, and vain to fear;' Himself had challeng'd, and the foe drew near.

Stern Telamon behind his ample shield,
As from a brazen tower, o'erlook'd the field.
Huge was its orb, with seven thick folds o'ercast,
Of tough bull-hides; of solid brass the last,
(The work of Tychius, who in Hyle dwell'd,
And all in arts of armoury excell'd.)

This Ajax bore before his manly breast,
And threatening, thus his adverse chief addrest.

Hector! approach my arm, and fingly know
What strength thou hast, and what the Grecian foe.
Achilles shuns the fight; yet some there are,
Not void of soul, and not unskill'd in war:
Let him, unactive on the sea-beat shore,
Indulge his wrath, and aid our arms no more;
Whole troops of heroes Greece has yet to boast,
And sends thee one, a sample of her host.
Such as I am, I come to prove thy might;
No more—be sudden, and begin the fight.

O son of Telamon, thy country's pride!
(To Ajax thus the Trojan prince reply'd)
Me, as a boy or woman wouldst thou fright,
New to the field, and trembling at the fight?
Thou meet'st a chief deserving of thy arms,
To combat born, and bred amidst alarms:
I know to shift my ground, remount the car,
Turn, charge, and answer every call of war;
To right, to left, the dextrous lance I wield,
And bear thick battle on my sounding shield.

But

290

285

E

275

But open be our fight, and bold each blow; I steal no conquest from a noble foe.

He faid, and rifing, high above the field Whirl'd the long lance against the sevenfold shield. Full on the brass descending from above Through fix bull-hides the furious weapon drove, Till in the seventh it fix'd. Then Ajax threw; Through Hector's shield the forceful javelin flew, 300 His corflet enters, and his garment rends, And glancing downwards near his flank descends. The wary Trojan shrinks, and, bending low Beneath his buckler, disappoints the blow. From their bor'd shields the chiefs their javelins drew, Then close impetuous, and the charge renew : Fierce as the mountain-lions bath'd in blood, Or foaming boars, the terrour of the wood. At Ajax, Hector his long lance extends; The blunted point against the buckler bends: But Ajax, watchful as his foe drew near, Drove)through the Trojan targe the knotty spear; It reach'd his neck, with matchless strength impell'd; Spouts the black gore, and dims his shining shield. Yet ceas'd not Hector thus; but, stooping down, In his strong hand up-heav'd a flinty stone, Black, craggy, vast: to this his force he bends; Full on the brazen boss the stone descends; The hollow brass resounded with the shock. Then Ajax seiz'd the fragment of a rock, Apply'd each nerve, and fwinging round on high, With force temperations let the ruin fly :

The

The huge stone thundering through his buckler broke?
His slacken'd knees receiv'd the numbing stroke;
Great Hector falls extended on the field,
His bulk supporting on the shatter'd shield:
Nor wanted heavenly aid: Apollo's might
Confirm'd his sinews, and restor'd to sight.
And now both heroes their broad faulchions drew:
In slaming circles round their heads they slew;
But then by heralds' voice the word was given,
The sacred ministers of earth and heaven:
Divine Talthybius whom the Greeks employ,
And sage Idæus on the part of Troy,
Between the swords their peaceful sceptres rear'd; 335.
And first Idæus' awful voice was heard.

Forbear, my fons! your farther force to prove,
Both dear to men, and both belov'd of Jove.
To either hoft your matchless worth is known,
Each sounds your praise, and war is all your own. 340
But now the night extends her awful shade;
The Goddess parts you: be the night obey'd.

To whom great Ajax his high foul express'd.

O sage! to Hector be these words address'd.

Let him who first provok'd our chiefs to fight,

Let him demand the sanction of the night;

If first he ask it, I content obey,

And cease the strife when Hector shows the way.

Oh first of Greeks! (his noble foe rejoin'd)

Whom heaven adorns, superior to thy kind, 350

With strength of body, and with worth of mind!

Now martial law commands us to forbear;

Hereaster we shall meet in glorious war,

Some

ILIAD, BOOK VII.	229
Some future day shall lengthen out the strife,	734
And let the Gods decide of death or life!	355
Since then the night extends her gloomy shade,	.333
And heaven enjoins it, be the night obey'd.	Part E
Return, brave Ajax, to thy Grecian friends,	277
And joy the nations whom thy arm defends;	to M
As I shall glad each chief, and Trojan wife,	360
Who wearies heaven with vows for Hector's life.	mi
But let us, on this memorable day,
Exchange some gift; that Greece and Troy may i	av.
" Not hate, but glory, made these chiefs contend
" And each brave foe was in his foul a friend."	365
With that, a fword with stars of filver grac'd,
The baldrick studded, and the sheath enchas'd,	100
He gave the Greek. The generous Greek bestow	d
A radiant belt that rich with purple glow'd.
Then with majestic grace they quit the plain;	370
This feeks the Grecian, that the Phrygian train.
The Trojan bands returning Hector wait,
And hail with joy the champion of their state:	0
Escap'd great Ajax, they survey'd him round,
Alive, unharm'd, and vigorous from his wound.	375
To Troy's high gates the godlike man they bear,	511
Their present triumph, as their late despair.	H
But Ajax, glorying in his hardy deed,
The well-arm'd Greeks to Agamemnon lead.
A steer for facrifice the king design'd,	380
Of full five years, and of the nobler kind.
The victim falls; they strip the smoking hide,
The beaft they quarter, and the joints divide;
	hen

1 a mine

Then spread the tables, the repast prepare,
Each takes his seat, and each receives his share. 385
The king himself (an honorary sign)
Before great Ajax plac'd the mighty chine.
When now the rage of hunger was remov'd,
Nestor, in each persuasive art approv'd,
The sage whose counsels long had sway'd the rest, 390
In words like these his prudent thought exprest.

How dear, O kings! this fatal day has coft, What Greeks are perish'd! what a people lost! What tides of blood have drench'd Scamandra's shore! What crouds of heroes funk, to rife no more! 395 Then hear me, chief! nor let the morrow's light Awake thy fquadrons to new toils of fight: Some space at least permit the war to breathe, While we to flames our flaughter'd friends bequeathe, From the red field their fcatter'd bodies bear, And nigh the fleet a funeral structure rear; So decent urns their fnowy bones may keep, And pious children o'er their ashes weep. Here, where on one promiscuous pile they blaz'd, High o'er them all a general tomb be rais'd; Next, to fecure our camp, and naval powers, Raise an embattled wall, with lofty towers; From space to space be ample gates around, For paffing chariots; and a trench profound. So Greece to combat shall in safety go, 410 Nor fear the fierce incursions of the foe. 'Twas thus the fage his wholesome counsel mov'd; The sceptred kings of Greece his words approv'd.

Mean-

Meanwhile, conven'd at Priam's palace-gate,
The Trojan peers in nightly council fat:
A fenate void of order, as of choice;
Their hearts were fearful, and confus'd their voice.
Antenor rifing, thus demands their ear:
Ye Trojans, Dardans, and auxiliars, hear!
'Tis heaven the counfel of my breast inspires,
And I but move what every God requires:
Let Sparta's treasures be this hour restor'd,
And Argive Helen own her ancient lord.
The ties of faith, the sworn alliance broke,
Our impious battles the just Gods provoke.

As this advice ye practise, or reject,
So hope success, or dread the dire effect.

The senior spoke, and sat. To whom reply'd
The graceful husband of the Spartan bride.
Cold counsels, Trojan, may become thy years,
But sound ungrateful in a warriour's ears:
Old man, if void of fallacy or art,
Thy words express the purpose of thy heart,
Thou, in thy time, more sound advice hast given,
But wisdom has its date, assign'd by heaven.
But wisdom has its date, assign'd by heaven.
Their treasures I'll restore, but not the dame;
My treasures too, for peace, I will resign;
But be this bright possession ever mine.

'Twas then, the growing discord to compose, 446 Slow from his seat the reverend Priam rose: His God-like aspect deep attention drew: He paus'd, and these pacific words ensue.

Ye

Ye Trojans, Dardans, and auxiliar bands!

Now take refreshment as the hour demands:

Guard well the walls, relieve the watch of night,

Till the new sun restore the chearful light:

Then shall our herald to th' Atrides sent,

Before their ships proclaim my son's intent.

Next let a truce be ask'd, that Troy may burn

Her slaughter'd heroes, and their bones inurn;

That done, once more the sate of war be try'd,

And whose the conquest, mighty Jove decide!

The monarch spoke! the warriours snatch'd with haste (Each at his post in arms) a short repast.

455
Soon as the rosy morn had wak'd the day,
To the black ships Idæus bent his way;
There, to the sons of Mars, in council found,
He rais'd his voice: the host stood listening round.

Ye fons of Atreus, and ye Greeks, give ear! 460
The words of Troy, and Troy's great monarch hear.
Pleas'd may ye hear (so heaven succeed my prayers)
What Paris, author of the war, declares.
The spoils and treasures he to Ilion bore,
(Oh had he perish'd ere they touch'd our shore!) 465
He proffers injur'd Greece; with large increase
Of added Trojan wealth to buy the peace.
But to restore the beauteous bride again,
This Greece demands, and Troy requests in vain.
Next, O ye chiefs! we ask a truce to burn
Our slaughter'd heroes, and their bones inurn.
That done, once more the fate of war be try'd,
And whose the conquest, mighty Jove decide!

The

The Greeks gave ear, but none the filence broke;
At length Tydides rose, and rising spoke.

Oh, take not, friends! defrauded of your fame,
Their proffer'd wealth, nor ev'n the Spartan dame.
Let conquest make them ours: fate shakes their wall,
And Troy already totters to her fall.

Th' admiring chiefs, and all the Greeian name, With general shouts return'd him loud acclaim. Then thus the King of Kings rejects the peace: Herald! in him thou hear'st the voice of Greece. For what remains; let funeral flames be fed With theroes corpse; I war not with the dead : Go fearch your flaughter'd chiefs on yonder plain, And gratify the manes of the flain. Be witness, Jove, whose thunder rolls on high! He faid, and, rear'd his fceptre to the fky. I To facred Troy, where all her princes lay To wait th' event, the herald bent his way. He came, and, standing in the midst, explain'd The peace rejected, but the truce obtain'd. Straight to their feveral cares the Trojans move, Some fearch the plains, fome fell the founding grove ; Nor less the Greeks, descending on the shore, Hew'd the green forests, and the bodies bore. And now from forth the chambers of the main, To shed his facred light on earth again, Arose the golden chariot of the day, 500 And tipt the mountains with a purple ray. In mingled throngs the Greek and Trojan train Through heaps of carnage fearch'd the mournful plain.

Scarce

Scarce could the friend his flaughter'd friend explore, With dust dishonour'd, and deform'd with gore. 505 The wounds they wash'd, their pious tears they shed. And, laid along their cars, deplor'd the dead. Sage Priam check'd their grief : with filent hafte The bodies decent on their phowere plac'd: With melting hearts the cold remains they burn'd; And fadly flow to facred Troy return'd. Nor less the Greeks their pious forrows shed, And decent on the pile dispose the dead; The cold remains consume with equal care; And, flowly, fadly, to their fleet repair. 515 Now, ere the morn had ftreak'd with reddening light The doubtful confines of the day and night; About the dying flames the Greeks appear'd, And round the pile a general tomb they rear'd. Then, to fecure the camp and naval powers, They rais'd embattled walls with lofty towers : From space to space were ample gates around, For passing chariots; and a trench profound, Of large extent; and deep in earth, below, 525 Strong piles infix'd stood adverse to the foe.

So toil'd the Greeks: meanwhile the Gods above. In shining circle round their father Jove, Amaz'd beheld the wondrous works of man:
Then he, whose trident shakes the earth, began. 530

What mortals henceforth shall our power adore, Our fanes frequent, our oracles implore, If the proud Grecians thus successful boast Their rising bulwarks on the sea-beat coast?

See

1

ILIAD, BOOK VII.

See the long walls extending to the main,
No God confulted, and no victim flain!
Their fame shall fill the world's remotest ends;
Wide, as the morn her golden beam extends,
While old Laömedon's divine abodes,
Those radiant structures rais'd by labouring Gods, 540
Shall, raz'd and lost, in long oblivion sleep.
Thus spoke the hoary monarch of the deep.

Th' Almighty Thunderer with a frown replies,
That clouds the world, and blackens half the skies.
Strong God of Ocean! thou, whose rage can make 545
The solid earth's eternal basis shake!
What cause of fear from mortal works could move
The meanest subject of our realms above?
Where e'er the sun's refulgent rays are cast,
Thy power is honour'd, and thy fame shall last.

550
But yon proud work no future age shall view,
No trace remain where once the glory grew.
The sapp'd foundations by thy force shall fall,
And, whelm'd beneath thy waves, drop the huge wall:
Vast drifts of sand shall change the former shore;
555
The ruin vanish'd, and the name no more.

Thus they in heaven: while o'er the Grecian train, The rolling fun descending to the main Beheld the finish'd work. Their bulls they slew:
Black from the tents the savory vapours slew.

560
And now the sleet, arriv'd from Lemnos' strands,
With Bacchus' blessings chear'd the generous bands.

Of fragrant wines the rich Eunæus sent
A thousand measures to the royal tent.

Eunæus,

(Eunæus, whom Hypfipyle of yore 565 To Jason, shepherd of his people, bore) The rest they purchas'd at their proper cost, And well the plenteous freight supply'd the hoft: Each, in exchange, proportion'd treasures gave: Some brafs, or iron; some an ox, or slave. All night they feaft, the Greek and Trojan powers; Those on the fields, and these within their towers. But Jove averse the signs of wrath display'd, And that red lightnings through the gloomy shade: Humbled they food; pale horrour feiz'd on all, 575 While the deep thunder shook th' aërial hall. Each pour'd to Jove, before the bowl was crown'd; And large libations drench'd the thirsty ground: Then late, refresh'd with sleep from toils of fight, Enjoy'd the balmy bleffings of the night.

to wanted after a new artists are more a various

The day of the sound stone to discussed that the sound sound and the sound the sound sound

e i alice de la company de la ig no futnit our thall wire.

clary in heaven a while o'er med real may all

THE

THE. felt and the green de Mary arrest to table and at the Company of the action of the attention of

direct the Greek by her sweetings EIGHTH BOOK

STALL ANGEL IN S OF THE are the first address of the light and the second was but a light sale should be and read professions the production of the state of

At 1 1 to a man at of more than a large to item. ed (constitution) and state of the state of

at an author sold school of the forms

Prince who is it to got worth for and the account tripparticularity of their given account the plant of the state of the state of 15 solve the bile through acts along Lorgest Talland on

THE ARGUMENT.

The second Battle, and the distress of the Greeks.

JUPITER assembles a council of the Deities, and threatens them with the pains of Tartarus if they affift either fide: Minerva only obtains of him that the may direct the Greeks by her counfels. The armies join battle: Jupiter on Mount Ida weighs in his balances the fates of both, and affrights the Greeks with his thunders and lightnings. Neftor alone continues in the field in great danger; Diomed relieves him; whose exploits, and those of Hector, are excellently described. Juno endeavours to animate Neptune to the affistance of the Greeks, but in vain, The acts of Teucer, who is at length wounded by Hector, and carried off. Juno and Minerva prepare to aid the Grecians; but are restrained by Iris, sent frem Jupiter. The night puts an end to the battle. Hector continues in the field (the Greeks being driven to their fortification before the ships) and gives orders to keep the watch all night in the camp, to prevent the enemy from reimbarking and escaping by flight. They kindle fires through all the field, and pass the night under arms.

The time of seven and twenty days is employed from the opening of the poem to the end of this book. The scene here (except of the celestial machines) lies in the field toward the sea-shore.

THE

I L I A D.

BOOK VIII.

A URORA now, fair daughter of the dawn, Sprinkled with rofy light the dewy lawn; When Jove conven'd the senate of the skies, Where high Olympus' cloudy tops arise. The Sire of Gods his awful silence broke, The heavens attentive trembled as he spoke.

Celestial states, immortal Gods! give ear, Hear our decree, and reverence what ye hear; The fix'd decree, which not all heaven can move; Thou Fate! fulfil it; and, ye powers! approve! What God but enters yon forbidden field, Who yields affiftance, or but wills to yield; Back to the skies with shame he shall be driven. Gash'd with dishonest wounds, the scorn of heaven: Or far, oh far from steep Olympus thrown, Low in the dark Tartarean gulf shall groan, With burning chains fix'd to the brazen floors, And lock'd by hell's inexorable doors; As deep beneath th' infernal centre hurl'd, As from that centre to th' ethereal world. Let him who tempts me, dread those dire abodes; And know, th' Almighty is the God of Gods.

Largue

240

League all your forces then, ye powers above,
Join all, and try th' omnipotence of Jove:
Let down our golden everlasting chain,
Whose strong embrace holds heaven, and earth, and main:

Strive all, of mortal and immortal birth,
To drag, by this, the Thunderer down to earth:
Ye strive in vain! If I but stretch this hand,
I heave the Gods, the ocean, and the land;
I fix the chain to great Olympus' height,
And the vast world kangs trembling in my sight!
For such I reign, unbounded and above;
And such are men, and Gods, compar'd to Jove.

Th' Almighty spoke, nor durst the powers reply, A reverend horrour silenc'd all the sky; Trembling they stood before their sovereign's look; At length his best-belov'd, the power of Wisdom spoke.

Oh first and greatest! God, by Gods ador'd!

We own thy might, our father and our Lord!

But ah! permit to pity human state:

If not to help, at least lament their fate.

From fields forbidden we submiss refrain,

With arms unaiding mourn our Argives slain;

Yet grant my counsels still their breasts may move, 45

Or all must perish in the wrath of Jove.

The cloud-compelling God her fuit approv'd,
And smil'd superiour on his best-belov'd.

Then call'd his coursers, and his chariot took;
The stedfast firmament beneath them shook:
Rapt by th' æthereal steeds the chariot roll'd;
Brass were their hoofs, their curling manes of gold.

ILIAD, Book VIII.

Of heaven's undrossy gold the God's array
Refulgent, flash'd intolerable day.
High on the throne he shines: his coursess fly

55

But when to Ida's topmost height he came,
(Fair nurse of fountains, and of savage game)
Where, o'er her pointed summits proudly rais'd,

His fane breath'd odours, and his altars blaz'd: 60
There, from his radiant car the facred Sire
Of Gods and men releas'd the fleeds of fire:
Blue ambient mifts th' immortal fleeds embrac'd;
High on the cloudy point his feat he plac'd;

Thence his broad eye the subject world surveys, 65.

The town, and tents, and navigable seas.

Now had the Grecians snatch'd a short repast,
And buckled on their shining arms with haste.
Troy rous'd as soon; for on this dreadful day
The fact of fathers, wives, and infants, lay.
The gates unfolding pour forth all their train;
Squadrons on squadrons cloud the dusky plain:
Men, steeds, and chariots, shake the trembling ground;
The tumult thickens, and the skies resound.
And now with shouts the shocking armies clos'd,
To lances lances, shields to shields oppos'd,
Host against host with shadowy legions drew,
The sounding darts in iron tempests slew,
Victors and vanquish'd join promiscuous cries,
Triumphant shouts and dying groans arise;

With streaming blood the slippery fields are dy'd, And slaughter'd heroes swell the dreadful tide.

You. I.

R.

Long

Long as the morning beams encreasing bright, O'er heaven's clear/azure spread the facred light; Commutual death the fate of war confounds, Each adverse battle gor'd with equal wounds. But when the Sun the height of heaven ascends; The Sire of Gods his golden scales suspends, With equal hand: in thefe explor'd the fate Of Greece and Troy, and pois'd the mighty weight. Press'd with its load, the Grecian balance lies Low funk on earth, the Trojan strikes the skies. Then Jove from Ida's top his horrour spreads; The clouds burft dreadful o'er the Grecian heads: Thick lightnings flash; the muttering thunder rolls; Their strength he withers, and unmans their fouls. Before his wrath the trembling hofts retire; The God in terrours, and the skies on fire, Nor great Idomeneus that fight could bear, Nor each stern Ajax, thunderbolts of war: Nor he, the king of men, th' alarm fuftain'd; Neftor alone amidft the fform remain'd. Unwilling he remain'd, for Paris' dart Had pierc'd his courfer in a mortal part; Fix'd in the forehead where the fpringing mone Curl'd o'er the brow, it flung him to the brain: Mad with his anguish, he begins to rear, Paw with his hoofs aloft, and lash the air. Scarce had his faulchion cut the reins, and freed Th' incumber'd chariot from the dying fleed, When dreadful Hector, thundering through the war, Pour'd to the tumult on his whirling car.

That

T

B

0

N

O

T

Hi

Ul

Bu

A

Be

He

TI

Th

W

Th

Ob

Pra

To

Th

Lea

Wi

Nor

Fier

The

1

That day had stretch'd beneath his matchless hand
The hoary monarch of the Pylian band,
But Diomed beheld: from forth the croud
He rush'd, and on Ulysses call'd aloud.

Whither, oh whither does Ulysses run?
Oh slight unworthy great Laërtes' fon!
Mix'd with the vulgar shall thy fate be found,
Pierc'd in the back, a vile, dishonest wound?
Oh turn and save from Hector's direful rage
The glory of the Greeks, the Pylian sage.
His fruitless words are lost unheard in air,
Ulysses seeks the ships, and shelters there.
But bold Tydides to the rescue goes,
A single warriour 'midst a host of foes;
Before the coursers with a sudden spring

He leap'd, and anxious thus bespoke the king.

Great perils, father! wait th' unequal fight;
These younger champions will oppress thy might. 130
Thy veins no more with ancient vigour glow,
Weak is thy servant, and thy coursers flow.

Then haste, ascend my seat, and from the car
Observe the steeds of Tros, renown'd in war,
Practis'd alike to turn, to stop, to chace,
To dare the fight, or urge the rapid race:
These late obey'd Æneas' guiding rein;
Leave thou thy chariot to our faithful train:
With these against you Trojans will we go,
Nor shall great Hector want an equal foe;
Fierce as he is, ev'n he may learn to fear

R 2

The thirsty fury of my flying spear.

This

Built T

Thus said the chief; and Nestor, skill'd in war, Approves his counsel, and ascends the car: The steeds he left, their trusty servants hold; 145 Eurymedon, and Sthenelus the bold : bas all has set The reverend charioteer directs the courfe, And strains his aged arm to lash the horse. Hector they face; unknowing how to fear, Fierce he drove on; Tydides whirl'd his spear. 150 The spear with erring haste mistook its way, But plung'd in Eniopeus' bosom lay. His opening hand in death forfakes the rein; The fleeds fly back : he falls, and fpurns the plain. Great Hector forrows for his fervant kill'd, Yet unreveng'd permits to press the field; Till to supply his place and rule the car, Rose Archeptolemus, the fierce in war. And now had death and horrour cover'd all; Like fimorous flocks the Trojans in their wall 163. Inclos'd had bled: but Jove with awful found Roll'd the big thunder o'er the vast profound: Full in Tydides' face the lightning flew; The ground before him flam'd with fulphur blue; The quivering steeds fell prostrate at the fight; 165 And Nestor's trembling hand confess'd his fright; He drop'd the reins; and shook with sacred dread, Thus, turning, warn'd th' intrepid Diomed. O chief! too daring in thy friend's defence,

Retire advis'd, and urge the chariot hence.

This day, averse, the sovereign of the skies.

Assists great Hector, and our palm denies.

Some

30

W

°I

T

T

Bu

1 i

0

T

G

H

N

N

N

T

H

D

T

T

T

P

G

N

G

T

T

Some other fun may fee the happier hour,
When Greece shall conquer by his heavenly power.
'Tis not in man his fix'd decree to move:

175
The great will glory to submit to Jove.

O reverend prince! (Tydides thus replies) Thy years are awful, and thy words are wife. But ah, what grief! should haughty Hector boast, I fled inglorious to the guarded coaft. Before that dire difgrace shall blast my fame, O'erwhelm me, earth; and hide a warriour's shame. To whom Gerenian Nestor thus reply'd: Gods! can thy courage fear the Phrygian's pride? Hector may vaunt, but who shall heed the boast? Not those who felt thy arm, the Dardan host, Nor Troy, yet bleeding in her heroes loft; Not ev'n a Phrygian dame, who dreads the fword That laid in dust her lov'd, lamented lord. He faid, and haity o'er the gasping throng 190' Drives the swift steeds; the chariot smokes along. The shouts of Trojans thicken in the wind; The storm of hissing javelins pours behind. Then, with a voice that shakes the folid skies, Pleas'd Hector braves the warriour as he flies. 195 Go, mighty hero, grac'd above the rest In feats of council and the sumptuous feast: Now hope no more those honours from thy train; Go, less than woman, in the form of man! To scale our walls, to wrap our towers in flames, 200 To lead in exile the fair Phrygian dames, Thy once proud hopes, presumptuous prince! are fled; This arm shall reach thy heart, and stretch thee dead.

R 3

Now

Now fears diffuade him, and now hopes invite, To ftop his courfers, and to ftand the fight; 205 Thrice turn'd the chief, and thrice imperial Jove On Ida's summits thunder'd from above: Great Hector heard; he faw the flashing light, (The fign of conquest) and thus urg'd the fight.

Hear, every Trojan, Lycian, Dardan band, All fam'd in war, and dreadful hand to hand. Be mindful of the wreaths your arms have won, Your great forefathers' glories, and your own. Heard ye the voice of Jove? Success and fame Await on Troy, on Greece eternal shame. In vain they skulk behind their boasted wall, Weak bulwarks! deftin'd by this arm to fall. High o'er their flighted trench our fleeds fhall bound; And pass victorious o'er the level'd mound. Soon as before you hollow thips we stand, Fight each with flames, and tofs the blazing brand; Till their proud navy wrapt in smoke and fires, All Greece, encompass'd, in one blaze expires.

Furious he faid; then, bending o'er the yoke, Encourag'd his proud steeds, while thus he spoke. Now, Xonthus, Æthon, Lampus! urge the chace, And, thou, Podargus! prove thy generous race: Be fleet, be fearlefs, this important day, And all your mafter's well-spent care repay. For this, high-fed in plenteous stalls ye stand, Serv'd with pure wheat, and by a princess' band; For this my spouse, of great Aëtion's line, So oft has fleep'd the ftrengthening grain in wine.

Now

7

V

I

S

Now swift pursue, now thunder uncontrol'd; Give me to seize rich Nestor's shield of gold; From Tydeus' shoulders strip the costly load, Vulcanian arms, the labour of a God: These if we gain, then victory, ye powers! This night; this glorious night, the sleet is ours.

That heard, deep anguish stung Saturnia's soul;
She shook her throne that shook the starry pole;
And thus to Neptune: Thou, whose force can make
The stedfast earth from her foundations shake;
See'st thou the Greeks by fates unjust opprest,
Nor swells thy heart in that immortal breast?

245
Yet Ægæ; Helice, thy power obey,
And gifts unceasing on thine altars lay.
Would all the Deities of Greece combine,
In vain the gloomy Thunderer might repine:
Sole should he sit, with scarce a God to friend,
And see his Trojans to the shades descend:
Such be the scene from his Idean bower;
Ungrateful prospect to the sullen power!

Neptune with wrath rejects the rash design: What rage, what madness, furious Queen, is thine? I war not with the Highest. All above Submit and tremble at the hand of Jove.

Now godlike Hector, to whose matchless might Jove gave the glory of the destin'd fight,
Squadrons on squadrons drives, and fills the fields
With close-rang'd chariots, and with thicken'd shields.
Where the deep trench in length extended lay,
Compacted troops stand wedg'd in sirm array,

R 4

A dread-

A dreadful front! they shake the brands, and threat With long-destroying flames the hostile fleet. 265 The king of men, by Juno's felf inspir'd, Toil'd through the tents, and all his army fir'd. Swift as he mov'd, he lifted in his hand His purple robe, bright enfign of command. High on the midmost bark the king appear'd; There, from Ulysses' deck his voice was heard: To Ajax and Achilles reach'd the found, Whose distant ships the guarded navy bound. Oh Argives ! shame of human race; he cry'd, (The hollow veffels to his voice reply'd) Where now are all your glorious boafts of yore, Your hasty triumphs on the Lemnian shore? Each fearless hero dares an hundred foes, While the feast lasts, and while the goblet flows; But who to meet one martial man is found, 280 When the fight rages, and the flames furround? O mighty Jove! oh fire of the diffres'd! Was ever king like me, like me oppress'd? With power immense, with justice arm'd in vain; My glory ravish'd, and my people slain! 285 To thee my vows were breath'd from every shore; What altar smok'd not with our victim's gore? With fat of bulls I fed the constant slame, And ask'd destruction to the Trojan name. Now, gracious God! far humbler our demand; Give these at least t' escape from Hector's hand, And fave the relicks of the Grecian land !

Thus pray'd the king, and heaven's great Father heard. His vows, in bitterness of soul preferr'd;

The

TLIAD, BOOK VIII. The wrath appeas'd, by happy figns declares. And gives the people to their monarch's prayers. His eagle, facred bird of heaven! he fent, A fawn his talons truss'd (divine portent!) High o'er the wondering hofts he foar'd above, Who paid their vows to Panomphæan Jove; Then let the prey before his altar fall, The Greeks beheld, and transport seiz'd on all: Encouraged by the fign, the troops revive, And fierce on Troy with double fury drive. Tydides first, of all the Grecian force, 395 O'er the broad ditch impell'd his foaming horse, Pierc'd the deep ranks, their strongest battle tore, And dy'd his javelin red with Trojan gore. Young Agelaüs (Phradmon was his fire) With flying courfers shun'd his dreadful ire: 310 Struck through the back, the Phrygian fell oppreft; The dart drove on, and iffued at his breast: Headfong he quits the car; his arms refound: His ponderous buckler thunders on the ground. Forth rush a tide of Greeks, the passage freed; 315 Th' Atridæ first, th' Ajaces next succeed: Meriones, like Mars in arms renown'd, And God-like Idomen, now pass'd the mound: Evæmon's fon next issues to the foe, And last, young Teucer with his bended bow. 300 Secure behind the Telamonian shield The skilful archer wide survey'd the field, With every shaft some holdile victim slew, Then close beneath the seven-fold orb withdrew: The

POPE'S HOMER.

The conscious infant so, when fear alarms, Retires for fafety to the mother's arms. Thus Ajax guards his brother in the field, Moves as he moves, and turns the shining shield. Who first by Teucer's mortal arrows bled? Orfilochus; then fell Ormenus dead : The god-like Lycophon next press'd the plain, With Chromius, Detor, Ophelestes slaine Bold Hamonaon breathless funk to ground; The bloody pile great Melanippus crown'd. Heaps fell on heaps, fad trophies of his art, A Trojan ghost attended every dart. Great Agamemnon views with joyful eye The ranks grow thinner as his arrows fly : Oh youth for ever dear ! (the monarch cry'd) Thus, always thus, thy early worth be try'd; Thy brave example shall retrieve our host, Thy country's faviour, and thy father's boaft! Sprung from an alien's bed thy fire to grace, The vigorous offspring of a stol'n embrace, Proud of his boy, he own'd the generous flame, 345 And the brave fon repays his cares with fame. Now hear a monarch's vow: If heaven's high powers: Give me to raze Troy's long-defended towers; Whatever treasures Greece for me defign, The next rich honorary gift be thine : Some golden tripod, or diftinguish'd car, With coursers dreadful in the ranks of war; Or some fair captive whom thy eyes approve, Shall recompense the warriour's toils with love.

To

T

Si

St

B

T

H

A

(

T

A

B

FLIAD, Book VIII.

To this the chief: With praise the rest inspire, 355.

Nor urge a soul already fill'd with fire.

What strength I have, be now in battle try'd,

Till every shaft in Phrygian blood be dy'd.

Since rallying from our wall we fore'd the foe,

Still aim'd at Hestor have I bent my bow:

Eight forky arrows from this hand have fled,

And eight bold heroes by their points lie dead:

But sure some God denies me to destroy.

This sury of the field, this dog of Troy.

He faid, and twang'd the ftring. The weapon flies At Hector's breaft, and fings along the fkies: He mis'd the mark; but pierc'd Gorgythio's heart, And drench'd in royal blood the thirsty dart. (Fair Castianira, nymph of form divine, This offspring added to king Priam's line. As full-blown poppies, over-charg'd with rain, Decline the head, and drooping kiss the plain; So finks the youth : his beauteous head, depreft Beneath his helmet, drops upon his breaft. Another maft the raging archer drew: That other maft with erring fury flew, (From Hector Phæbus turn'd the flying wound) Yet fell not dry or guiltless to the ground: Thy breaft, brave Archeptolemus ! it tore, And dipt its feathers in no vulgar gore. Headlong he falls: his fadden fall alarms The steeds, that startle at his founding arms. Hector with grief his charioteer beheld, All pale and breathless on the fanguine field.

Thens

The conscious infant so, when fear alarms, Retires for fafety to the mother's arms. Thus Ajax guards his brother in the field, Moves as he moves, and turns the flining shield. Who first by Teucer's mortal arrows bled? Orfilochus; then fell Ormenus dead; The god-like Lycophon next press'd the plain, With Chromius, Dætor, Ophelestes slain : Bold Hamopaon breathless funk to ground; The bloody pile great Melanippus crown'd. Heaps fell on heaps, fad trophies of his art, A Trojan ghost attended every dart. Great Agamemnon views with joyful eye The ranks grow thinner as his arrows fly: Oh youth for ever dear ! (the monarch cry'd) Thus, always thus, thy early worth be try'd; Thy brave example shall retrieve our host; Thy country's faviour, and thy father's boaft! Sprung from an alien's bed thy fire to grace, The vigorous offspring of a stol'n embrace, Proud of his boy, he own'd the generous flame, 345 And the brave fon repays his cares with fame. Now hear a monarch's vow ! If heaven's high powers : Give me to raze Troy's long-defended towers; Whatever treasures Greece for me defign, The next rich honorary gift be thine: Some golden tripod, or diftinguish'd car, With coursers dreadful in the ranks of war; Or some fair captive whom thy eyes approve, Shall recompense the warriour's toils with love.

To

Thens

To this the chief: With praise the rest inspire, 35$

Nor urge a soul already fill'd with fire.

What strength I have, be now in battle try'd,

Till every shaft in Phrygian blood be dy'd.

Since rallying from our wall we forc'd the foe,

Still aim'd at Hector have I bent my bow:

Eight forky arrows from this hand have fled,

And eight bold heroes by their points lie dead:

But sure some God denies me to destroy.

This sury of the field, this dog of Troy.

He faid, and twang'd the ftring. The weapon flies At Hector's breaft, and fings along the fkies: He miss'd the mark; but pierc'd Gorgythio's heart, And drench'd in royal blood the thirfty dart. (Fair Castianira, nymph of form divine, This offspring added to king Priam's line. As full-blown poppies, over-charg'd with rain, Decline the head, and drooping kiss the plain; So finks the youth: his beauteous head, depreft Beneath his helmet, drops upon his breaft. Another shaft the raging archer drew : That other maft with erring fury flew,. (From Hector Phoebus turn'd the flying wound) Yet fell not dry or guiltless to the ground: Thy breaft, brave Archeptolemus ! it tore, And dipt its feathers in no vulgar gore. Headlong he falls: his fudden fall alarms The steeds, that startle at his founding arms. Hector with grief his charioteer beheld, All pale and breathless on the fanguine field.

Then bids Cebriones direct the rein, 385 Quits his bright car, and iffues on the plain. Dreadful he shouts: from earth a stone he took, And rush'd on Teucer with the lifted rock. The youth already strain'd the forceful yew; The shaft already to his shoulder drew; 390 The feather in his hand, just wing'd for flight, Touch'd where the neck and hollow chest unite; There, where the juncture knits the channel bone, The furious chief discharg'd the craggy stone; The bow-string burst beneath the ponderous blow, 395 And his numb'd hand dismis'd his useless bow. He fell: but Ajax his broad shield display'd, And screen'd his brother with a mighty shade; Till great Alastor, and Mecistheus, bore The batter'd archer groaning to the shore.

Troy yet found grace before th' Olympian Sire,
He arm'd their hands, and fill'd their breafts with fire.
The Greek's, repuls'd, retreat behind their wall,
Or in the trench on heaps confus'dly fall.
First of the foe, great Hector march'd along,
With terrour cloath'd, and more than mortal strong.
As the bold hound, that gives the lion chace,
With beating bosom, and with eager pace,
Hangs on his haunch, or fastens on his heels,
Guards as he turns, and circles as he wheels:
Thus oft the Grecians turn'd, but still they flew;
Thus following Hector still the hindmost slew.
When slying they had pass'd the trench profound,
And many a chief lay gasping on the ground;

Before

(

T

Before the ships a desperate stand they made,
And sir'd the troops, and call'd the Gods to aid.

Fierce on his rattling chariot Hector came;
His eyes like Gorgon shot a sanguine slame
That wither'd all their host: like Mars he stood;
Dire as the monster, dreadful as the God!

Their strong distress the wife of Jove survey'd;
Then pensive thus, to war's triumphant maid.

Oh daughter of that God, whose arm can wield
Th' avenging bolt, and shake the sable shield!
Now, in this moment of her last despair,
Shall wretched Greece no more confess our care,
Condemn'd to suffer the full force of sate,
And drain the dregs of heaven's relentless hate?
Gods! shall one raging hand thus level all?
What numbers fell! what numbers yet shall fall!
What power divine shall Hector's wrath assuage?
Still swells the slaughter, and still grows the rage!

To whom the Goddess with the azure eyes:
Long since had Hector stain'd these fields with gore;
Stretch'd by some Argive on his native shore;
But He above, the Sire of heaven withstands,
Mocks our attempts, and slights our just demands.
The stubborn God, inslexible and hard,
Forgets my service and deserv'd reward:
Sav'd I, for this, his favourite * son distress'd,
By stern Euristheus with long labours press'd?
He begg'd, with tears he begg'd, in deep dismay;
I shot from heaven, and gave his arm the day.

Hercules.

Oh had my wildom known this dire event, When to grim Pluto's gloomy gates he went; The triple dog had never felt his chain, Nor Styx been crofs'd, nor hell explor'd in vain. Averse to me of all his heaven of Gods, At Thetis' fuit the partial Thunderer nods. To grace her gloomy, fierce, refenting fon, My hopes are frustrate, and my Greeks undone. Some future day, perhaps, he may be mov'd To call his blue-ey'd maid his best belov'd. Hafte, launch thy chariot, thro' you ranks to ride; 455 Myself will arm, and thunder at thy fide. Then, Goddess! fay, shall Hector glory then, (That terrour of the Greeks, that Man of men) When Juno's felf, and Pallas shall appear, All dreadful in the crimfon walks of war! What mighty Trojan then, on yonder shore, Explring, pale, and terrible no more, Shall feaft the fowls, and glut the dogs with gore? She ceas'd, and Juno rein'd the fleeds with care; (Heaven's awful empres, Saturn's other heir) Pallas, meanwhile, her various veil unbound, With flowers adorn'd, with art immortal crown'd; The radiant robe her facred fingers wove Floats in rich waves, and spreads the court of Jove. Her father's arms her mighty limbs invest, His cuiras blazes on her ample breaft. The vigorous power the trembling car afcends; Shook by her arm, the maffy javelin bends; Huge, ponderous, frong! that, when her fury burns, Proud tyrants humbles, and whole hofts o'erturns. 475 Saturnia

Saturnia lends the lash; the coursers fly;
Smooth glides the chariot through the liquid sky.
Heaven's gates spontaneous open to the powers,
Heaven's golden gates, kept by the winged Hours.
Commission'd in alternate watch they stand,
The sun's bright portals and the skies command;
Close, or unfold, th' eternal gates of day,
Bar heaven with clouds, or roll those clouds away.
The sounding hinges ring, the clouds divide;
Prone down the steep of heaven their course they guide.
But Jove incens'd, from Ida's top survey'd,
And thus enjoin'd the many-colour'd Maid.

Thaumantia! mount the winds, and stop their car;
Against the highest who shall wage the war?
If furious yet they dare the vain debate,
Thus have I spoke, and what I speak is Fate.
Their coursers crush'd beneath the wheels shall lie,
Their car in fragments scatter'd o'er the sky;
My light ning these rebellious shall confound,
And hurl them slaming, headlong to the ground,
And hurl them slaming, headlong to the ground,
Condemn'd for ten revolving years to weep
The wounds impress'd by burning thunder deep.
So shall Minerva learn to fear our ire,
Nor dare to combat her's and nature's Sire.
For Juno, headstrong and imperious still,
Soe
She claims some title to transgress our will.

Swift as the wind, the various-colour'd Maid
From Ida's top her golden wings display'd;
To great Olympus' shining gates the flies,
There meets the chariot rushing down the kies,
Restrains

Restrains their progress from the bright abodes,. And speaks the mandate of the Sire of Gods.

What frenzy, Goddesses! what rage can move Celestial minds to tempt the wrath of Jove? Defist, obedient to his high command; This is his word : and know, his word shall stand. His lightning your rebellion shall confound, And hurl you headlong, flaming to the ground: Your horses crush d beneath the wheels shall lie, Your car in fragment scatter'd o'er the fky! Yourselves condemn'd ten rolling years to week The wounds impress'd by burning thunder deep. So shall Minerva learn to fear his ire, Nor dare to combat her's and nature's Sire. For Juno, headstrong and imperious still, She claims some title to transgress his will: But thee what desperate insolence has driven, To lift thy lance against the King of heaven? Then, mounting on the pinions of the wind, She flew; and Juno thus her rage refign'd.

O daughter of that God, whose arm can wield.

Th' avenging bolt, and shake the dreadful shield!

No more let beings of superior birth

Contend with Jove for this low race of earth:

Triumphant now, now miserably slain,

530

They breathe or perish as the Fates ordain.

But Jove's high counsels full effect shall find;

And, ever constant, ever rule mankind.

She spoke, and backward turn'd her steeds of light, Adorn'd with manes of gold, and heavenly bright.

The-

The Hours unloos'd them, panting as they flood, And heap'd their mangers with ambrofial food. There ty'd, they rest in high celestial stalls; The chariot propt against the crystal walls. The pensive Goddesses, abash'd, controll'd, Mix with the Gods, and fill their feats of gold.

And now the thunderer meditates his flight From Ida's fummits to th' Olympian height. Swifter than thought the wheels inftinctive fly, Flame through the vast of air, and reach the sky. 545; 'Twas Neptune's charge his coursers to unbrace, And fix the car on its immortal base; There stood the chariot, beaming forth its rays, Till with a fnowy veil he fcreen'd the blaze. He, whose all-conscious eyes the world behold, 'Th' eternal Thunderer, fat thron'd in gold, High heaven the footstool of his feet he makes, And wide beneath him all Olympus shakes. Trembling afar th' offending Powers appear'd, Confus'd and filent, for his frown they fear'd. He faw their foul, and thus his word imparts; Pallas and Juno! fay, why heave your hearts? Soon was your battle o'er: proud Troy retir'd Before your face, and in your wrath expir'd. But know, whoe'er almighty power withstand! Unmatch'd our force, unconquer'd is our hand : Who shall the Sovereign of the skies control? Not all the Gods that crown the starry pole. Your hearts shall tremble, if our arms we take, And each immortal nerve with horror shake,

555

560

565 Fore

YOL. I.

For thus I speak; and what I speak shall stand; What power soe'er provokes our listed hand, On this our hill no more shall hold his place; Cut off, and exil'd from th' æthereal race.

Juno and Pallas grieving hear the doom, But feast their fouls on Ilion's woes to come. Though fecret anger swell'd Minerva's breaft, The prudent Goddess yet her wrath represt: But Juno, impotent of rage, replies. What hast thou said, Oh tyrant of the skies! 575 Strength and omnipotence invest thy throne; 'Tis thine to punish; ours to grieve alone. For Greece we grieve, abandon'd by her fate, To drink the dregs of thy unmeasur'd hate: From fields forbidden we submits refrain, 580 With arms unaiding fee our Argives flain; Yet grant our counsels still their breasts may move, Lest all should perish in the rage of Jove.

The Goddess thus: and thus the God replies,
Who swells the clouds, and blackens all the skies.
The morning sun awak'd by loud aiarms,
Shall see th' Almighty Thunderer in arms.
What heaps of Argives then shall load the plain,
Those radiant eyes shall view, and view in vain.
Nor shall great Hector cease the rage of sight,
The navy slaming, and thy Greeks in slight,
Ev'n till the day, when certain fates ordain
That stern Achilles (his Patroclus slain)
Shall rise in vengeance, and lay waste the plain.
For such is fate, nor canst thou turn its course
With all thy rage, with all thy rebel force.

Fly,

595

590

Fly, if thou wilt, to earth's remotest bound,
Where on her utmost verge the seas resound;
Where curs'd Iapetus and Saturn dwell,
Fast by the brink, within the steams of hell;
No sun e'er gilds the gloomy horrours there;
No chearful gales refresh the lazy air;
There arm once more the bold Titanian band;
And arm in vain; for what I will, shall stand.

Now deep in ocean funk the lamp of light,

And drew behind the cloudy veil of night:

The conquering Trojans mourn his beams decay'd;

The Greeks rejoicing bless the friendly shade.

The victors keep the field; and Hector calls
A martial council near the navy walls:

These to Scamander's bank apart he led,
Where thinly scatter'd lay the heaps of dead.
Th' assembled chiefs, descending on the ground,
Attend his order, and their prince surround.
A massy spear he bore of mighty strength,
Of full ten cubits was the lance's length,
The point was brass, refulgent to behold,
Fix'd to the wood with circling rings of gold:
The noble Hector on this lance reclin'd.
And bending-forward, thus reveal'd his mind.

Ye valiant Trojans, with attention hear!
Ye Dardan bands, and generous aids, give ear!
This day, we hop'd, would wrap in conquering flame
Greece with her ships, and crown our toils with fame.
But darkness now, to save the cowards, falls.

625
And guards them trembling in their wooden walls.

Obey

Obey the Night, and use her peaceful hours

Our steeds to forage, and refresh our powers.

Straight from the town be sheep and oxen sought,

And strengthening bread, and generous wine be brought.

Wide o'er the field, high blazing to the fky, Let numerous fires the absent fun fupply, The flaming piles with plenteous fuel, raife, Till the bright morn her purple beam displays; Lest, in the filence and the shades of night, 635 Greece on her fable ships attempt her flight. Not unmolested let the wretches gain Their lofty decks, or fafely cleave the main; Some hostile wound let every dart bestow, Some lasting token of the Phrygian foe, Wounds, that long hence may ask their spouses' care, And warn their children from a Trojan war. Now through the circuit of our Ilion wall, Let facred heralds found the folemn call; To bid the fires with hoary honours crown'd, And beardless youths, our battlements surround. Firm be the guard, while diffant lie our powers, And let the matrons hang with lights the towers: Left, under covert of the midnight shade, Th' infidious foe the naked town invade. Suffice, to-night, these orders to obey; A nobler charge shall rouse the dawning day. The Gods, I truft, shall give to Hector's hand, From these detested foes to free the land, Who plow'd, with fates averse, the watery way; 655-For Trojan vultures a predeftin'd prey.

Qui

As

Our common fafety must be now the care; But foon as morning paints the fields of air, Sheath'd in bright arms let every troop engage And the fir'd fleet behold the battle rage. Then, then shall Hector and Tydides prave, Whose fates are heaviest in the scales of Joye. To-morrow's light (oh haste the glorious morn!) Shall fee his bloody spoils in triumph borne, With this keen javelin shall his breast be gor'd, 665 And prostrate heroes bleed around their lord. Certain as this, oh! might my days endure, From age inglorious, and black death fecure; So might my life and glory know no bound, Like Pallas worship'd, like the fun renown'd! 670 As the next dawn, the last they shall enjoy, Shall crush the Greeks, and end the woes of Troy.

The leader spoke. From all his host around Shouts of applause along the shores resound.

Each from the yoke the smoking steeds unty'd,
And fix'd their headstalls to his chariot-side.

Fat sheep and oxen from the town are led,
With generous wine, and all-sustaining bread.

Full hecatombs lay burning on the shore;
The winds to heaven the curling vapours bore.

Ungrateful offering to th' immortal powers!

Whose wrath hung heavy o'er the Trojan towers;
Nor Priam nor his sons obtain'd their grace;

Proud Troy they hated, and her guilty race.

The troops exulting fat in order round,
And beaming fires illumin'd all the ground,

As when the moon, refulgent lamp of night! O'er heaven's clear azure spreads her sacred light, When not a breath disturbs the deep serene, And not a cloud o'ercafts the folemn fcene; Around her throne the vivid planets roll, And ftars unnumber'd gild the glowing pole, O'er the dark trees a yellower verdure fled, And tip with filver every mountain's head; Then shine the vales, the rocks in prospect rife, A flood of glory burfts from all the fkies: The conscious swains, rejoicing in the fight, Eye the blue vault, and bless the useful light. So many flames before proud Ilion blaze, And lighten glimmering Xanthus with their rays : The long reflections of the distant fires 700 Gleam on the walls, and tremble on the spires. A thousand piles the dusky horrours gild, And shoot a shady lustre o'er the field. Full fifty guards each flaming pile attend, Whose umber'd arms, by fits, thick flashes fend, Loud neigh the courfers o'er their heaps of corn, And ardent warriors wait the rifing morn.

THE

THE

NINTH BOOK

OFTHE

I L I A D.

The second secon

*

THE ARGUMENT.

The Embaffy to Achilles.

Agamemnon, after the last day's defeat, proposes to the Greeks to quit the fiege, and return to their country. Diomed opposes this, and Nestor seconds him, praifing his wisdom and resolution. He orders the guard to be strengthened, and a council fummoned to deliberate what measures are to be followed in this emergency. Agamemnon pursues this advice, and Nestor farther prevails upon him to fend ambassadors to Achilles, in order to move him to a reconciliation. Ulysses and Ajax are made choice of, who are accompanied by old Phœnix. They make, each of them, very moving and preffing speeches, but are rejected with roughness by Achilles, who notwithstanding retains Phænix in his tent. The ambassadors return unsuccessfully to the camp, and the troops betake themselves to sleep.

This book, and the next following, take up the space of one night, which is the twenty-seventh from the beginning of the poem. The scene lies on the sea-shore, the station of the Grecian ships.

THE

I L I A D.

BOOK IX.

HUS joyful Troy maintain'd the watch of night; While fear, pale comrade of inglorious flight, And heaven-bred horrour, on the Grecian part, Sat on 'each face, and fadden'd every heart. As, from its cloudy dungeon issuing forth, A double tempest of the west and north Swells o'er the fea, from Thracia's frozen shore, Heaps waves on waves, and bids th' Ægean roar; This way and that, the boiling deeps are toft; Such various passions urge the troubled host. IO Great Agamemnon griev'd above the reft; Superiour forrows fwell'd his royal breaft; Himself his orders to the heralds bears, To bid to council all the Grecian peers, But bid in whifpers: these surround their chief, In folemn fadness, and majestic grief. The king amidst the mournful circle rose; . Down his wan cheek a briny torrent flows: So filent fountains, from a rock's tall head, In fable streams foft-trickling waters shed. With more than vulgar grief he stood opprest; Words, mixt with fighs, thus burfting from his breaft. Ye Ye fons of Greece! partake your leader's care; Fellows in arms, and princes of the war! Of partial Jove too juffly we complain, And heavenly oracles believ'd in vain. A fafe return was promis'd to our toils, With conquest honour'd, and enrich'd with spoils: Now shameful flight alone can fave the host; Our wealth, our people, and our glory loft. So Jove decrees. Almighty Lord of all! Jove, at whose nod whole empires rise or fall, Who shakes the feeble props of human trust, And towers and armies humbles to the dust. Haste then, for ever quit these fatal fields, Hafte to the joys our native country yields; Spread all your canvas, all your oars employ, Nor hope the fall of heaven-defended Troy.

He faid; deep filence held the Grecian band, Silent, unmov'd, in dire difmay they stand, A pensive scene! till Tydeus' warlike son Roll'd on the king his eyes, and thus begun.

When kings advise us to renounce our fame,
First let him speak, who first has suffer'd shame.
If I oppose thee, prince, thy wrath with-hold,
The laws of council bid my tongue be bold.
Thou first, and thou alone, in fields of fight,
Durst brand my courage, and defame my might:
Nor from a friend th' unkind reproach appear'd,
The Greeks stood witness, all our army heard.
The Gods, O chief! from whom our honours spring,
The Gods have made thee but by halves a king.

They

25

30

40

Then let me add what yet remains behind,
A thought unfinish'd in that generous mind;
Age bids me speak; nor shall th' advice I bring Distaste the people, or offend the king:

Curs'd is the man, and void of law and right, Unworthy property, unworthy light, Unfit for public rule, or private care; That wretch, that monster, who delights in war: Whose lust is murder, and whose horrid joy, To tear his country, and his kind deftroy ! This night, refresh and fortify thy train; Between the trench and wall let guards remain: Be that the duty of the young and bold; But thou, O king, to council call the old : Great is thy fway, and weighty are thy cares; Thy high commands must spirit all our wars. With Thracian wines recruit thy honour'd guests, For happy counsels flow from sober feasts. Wife, weighty counfels aid a state distrest, And fuch a monarch as can chuse the best. See! what a blaze from hostile tents aspires, How near our fleet approach the Trojan fires! Who can, unmov'd, behold the dreadful light, 105 What eye beholds them, and can close to-night? This dreadful interval determines all; To-morrow, Troy must flame, or Greece must fall.

Thus spoke the hoary sage: the rest obey; Swift through the gates the guards direct their way. His son was first to pass the losty mound, The generous Thrasymed, in arms renown'd:

Next

ILIAD, BOOK IX. 260 Next him, Ascalaphus, Ialmen, stood, The double offspring of the Warriour-God. Deipyrus, Aphareus, Merion join, 115 And Lycomed, of Creon's noble line. Seven were the leaders of the nightly bands, And each bold chief a hundred spears commands. The fires they light, to fhort repasts they fall, Some line the trench, and others man the wall. The king of men, on public counsels bent, Conven'd the princes in his ample tent; Each feiz'd a portion of the kingly feaft, But staid his hand when thirst and hunger ceas'd. Then Nestor spoke, for wisdom long approv'd, And, flowly rifing, thus the council mov'd. Monarch of nations! whose superior sway Affembled flates and lords of earth obey, The laws and sceptres to thy hand are given, And millions own the care of thee and heaven. O king! the counsels of my age attend; With thee my cares begin, in thee must end; Thee; prince! it fits alike to speak and hear, Pronounce with judgment, with regard give ear, To see no wholesome motion be withstood, And ratify the best for public good. Nor, though a meaner give advice, repine, But follow it, and make the wisdom thine. Hear then a thought, not now conceiv'd in hafte, At once my present judgment, and my past. When from Pelides' tent you forc'd the maid, I first oppos'd, and faithful durst disfuade; Buc

But bold of foul, when headlong fury fir'd,
You wrong'd the man, by men and Gods admir'd:
Now feek fome means his fatal wrath to end,
With prayers to move him, or with gifts to bend.

To whom the king. With justice hast thou shown A prince's faults, and I with reason own. That happy man, whom Jove still honours most, Is more than armies, and himself an host. 150 Bleft in his love, this wondrous hero flands; Heaven fights his war, and humbles all our bands. Fain would my heart, which err'd through frantic rage, The wrathful chief and angry Gods affuage. If gifts immense his mighty soul can bow, 155 Hear, all ye Greeks, and witness what I vow. Ten weighty talents of the purest gold, And twice ten vases of refulgent mold; Seven facred tripods, whose unfully'd frame Yet knows no office, nor has felt the flame : 160 Twelve steeds unmatch'd in sleetness and in force, And still victorious in the dusty course Rich were the man whose ample stores exceed The prizes purchas'd by their winged speed). Seven lovely captives of the Lesbian line, 165 Skill'd in each art, unmatch'd in form divine; The fame I chose for more than vulgar charms, When Lesbos sunk beneath the hero's arms: All thefe, to buy his friendship, shall be paid, And join'd with these the long-contested maid; With all her charms, Brifeis I refign, And folemn fwear those charms were never mine; Untouch'd

Untouch'd she stay'd, uninjur'd she removes, Pure from my arms, and guiltless of my loves. These instant shall be his; and if the powers Give to our arms proud Ilion's hostile towers, Then shall he store (when Greece the spoil divides) With gold and brafs his loaded navy's fides. Besides, full twenty nymphs of Trojan race With copious love shall crown his warm embrace; Such as himself will choose; who yield to none, Or yield to Helen's heavenly charms alone. Yet hear me farther: when our wars are o'er. If fafe we land on Argos' fruitful shore, There shall he live my son, our honours share, 185 And with Orestes' felf divide my care. Yet more---three daughters in my court are bred, And each well worthy of a royal bed; Laodicé and Iphigenia fair, And bright Chryfothemis with golden hair; Her let him choose, whom most his eyes approve I ask no presents, no reward for love: Myself will give the dower; fo vast a store As never father gave a child before. Seven ample cities shall confess his sway, Him Enopé, and Pheræ him obey, Cardamylé with ample turrets crown'd, And facred Pedafus for vines renown'd; Apea fair, the pastures Hira yields, And fich Antheia with her flowery fields: The whole extent to Pylos' fandy plain, Along the verdant margin of the main,

There heifers graze, and labouring oxen toil;
Bold are the men, and generous is the foil;
There shall he reign with power and justice crown'd,
And rule the tributary realms around.
All this I give, his vengeance to controul,
And sure all this may move his mighty soul.
Pluto, the grisly God, who never spares,
Who feels no mercy, and who hears no prayers, 210
Lives dark and dreadful in deep hell's abodes,
And mortals hate him, as the worst of Gods.
Great though he be, it fits him to obey;
Since more than his my years, and more my sway.

The monarch thus: the reverend Nestor then: 215
Great Agamemnon! glorious king of men!
Such are thy offers as a prince may take,
And such as fits a generous king to make.
Let chosen delegates this hour be sent,
(Myself will name them) to Pelides' tent: 220
Let Phænix lead, rever'd for hoary age,
Great Ajax next, and Ithacus the sage.
Yet more to sanctify the word you send,
Let Hodius and Eurybates attend.
Now pray to Jove to grant what Greece demands; 225
Pray, in deep silence, and with purest hands,

He faid, and all approv'd. The heralds bring
The cleanfing water from the living spring.
The youth with wine the facred goblets crown'd,
And large libations drench'd the fands around.
The rite perform'd, the chiefs their thirst allay,
Then from the royal tent they take their way;

Wife:

Wife Neftor turns on each his careful eye,
Forbids t' offend, instructs them to apply:
Much he advis'd them all, Ulysses most,	235
To deprecate the chief, and fave the hoft.
Through the still night they march, and hear the	roar
Of murmuring billows on the founding shore.
To Neptune, ruler of the seas profound,
Whose liquid arms the mighty globe surround,	240
They pour forth vows, their embassy to bless,
And calm the rage of stern Æacides.
And now, arriv'd, where, on the fandy bay
The Myrmidonian tents and vessels lay
Amus'd at ease, the god-like man they found,	245
Pleas'd with the folemn harp's harmonious found	~ 43
(The well-wrought harp from conquer'd Thebæ co	ame.
Of polish'd filver was its costly frame):	,
With this he foothes his angry foul, and fings
	250
Patroclus only of the royal train,	-3-
Plac'd in his tent, attends the lofty strain;
Full opposite he sat, and listen'd long,
In filence waiting till he ceas'd the fong.
Unseen the Grecian embassy proceeds	255
To his high tent; the great Ulyffes leads.	-33
Achilles starting, as the chiefs he spy'd,
Leap'd from his feat, and laid the harp afide.
With like furprize arose Menœtius' fon:
Pelides grafp'd their hands, and thus begun.	260
Princes, all hail! whatever brought you here,	200
Or ftrong necessity, or urgent fear;	WF RE
Vol. I. T Welco	me
The state of the s	11103

Welcome, though Greeks! for not as foes ye came; To me more dear than all that bear the name.

With that, the chiefs beneath his roof he led, 265
And plac'd in feats with purple carpets spread.
Then thus---Patroclus, crown a larger bowl,
Mix purer wine, and open every soul.
Of all the warriours yonder host can fend,
Thy friend most honours these, and these thy friend.

He faid; Patroclus o'er the blazing fire, Heaps in a brazen vase three chines entire: The brazen vase Automedon sustains, Which flesh of porket, sheep, and goat contains: Achibes at the genial feast presides, The parts transfixes, and with skill divides. Meanwhile Patroclus sweats the fire to raise; The tent is brighten'd with the rifing blaze: Then, when the languid flames at length subfide, He strows a bed of glowing embers wide, 280 Above the coals the smoaking fragments turns, And sprinkles sacred salt from lifted urns; With bread the glittering canisters they load, Which round the board Menœtius' fon beftow'd; Himfelf, oppos'd t' Ulysses full in fight, Each portion parts, and orders every rite. The first fat offerings, to th' immortals due, Amidst the greedy flames Patroclus threw; Then each, indulging in the focial feaft, His thirst and hunger foberly represt. 290 That done, to Phænix Ajax gave the fign; Not unperceiv'd; Ulysses crown'd with wine

The

The foaming bowl, and instant thus began, His speech addressing to the God-like man.

Health to Achilles! happy are thy guests! Not those more honour'd whom Atrides feasts: Though generous plenty crown thy loaded boards, That Agamemnon's regal tent affords; But greater cares fit heavy on our fouls, Not eas'd by banquets or by flowing bowls. What scenes of slaughter in you fields appear! The dead we mourn, and for the living fear; Greece on the brink of fate all doubtful stands, And owns no help but from thy faving hands: Troy and her aids for ready vengeance call; Their threatening tents already shade our wall: Hear how with shouts their conquest they proclaim, And point at every ship their vengeful flame! For them the Father of the Gods declares, Theirs are his omens, and his thunder theirs. See, full of Jove, avenging Hestor rife! See! heaven and earth the raging chief defies; What fury in his breaft, what lightning in his eyes! He waits but for the morn, to fink in flame The ships, the Greeks, and all the Grecian name. 315 Heavens! how my country's woes distract my mind, Lest fate accomplish all his rage defign'd. And must we, Gods ! our heads inglorious lay In Trojan dust, and this the fatal day? Return, Achilles I oh return, though late, To fave thy Greeks, and stop the course of fate; If in that heart or grief or courage lies, Rife to redeem; ah yet, to conquer, rise!

T 2

The

The day may come, when, all our warriours flain, That heart shall melt, that courage rise in vain. 325 Regard in time, O prince divinely brave! Those wholesome counsels which thy father gave. When Peleus in his aged arms embrac'd His parting fon, these accents were his last. My child! with strength, with glory and success, 330 Thy arms may Juno and Minerva bless! Trust that to heaven: but thou, thy cares engage To calm thy paffions, and subdue thy rage: From gentler manners let thy glory grow, And shun contention, the sure source of woe; That young and old may in thy praise combine, The virtues of humanity be thine-This, now despis'd, advice thy father gave; Ah! check thy anger, and be truly brave. If thou wilt yield to great Atrides' prayers, Gifts worthy thee his royal hand prepares; If not-but hear me, while I nimber o'er The profer'd prefents, an exhauftless store. Ten weighty talents of the pureft gold, And twice ten vales of refulgent mould; Seven facred tripods, whose unfully'd frame Yet knows no office, nor has felt the flame: Twelve steeds unmatch'd in fleetness and in force, And fill victorious in the dufty course (Rich were the man, whose ample stores exceed The prizes purchas'd by their winged speed). Seven lovely captives of the Lesbian line, Skill'd in each art, unmatch'd in form divine; The

ILIAD. BOOK IX. 277 The same he chose for more than vulgar charms, When Lesbos sunk beneath thy conquering arms. 355 All these, to buy thy friendship, shall be paid, And join'd with these the long-contested maid; With all her charms, Briseis he'll resign, And folemn fwear those charms were only thine; Untouch'd she stay'd, uninjur'd she removes, 360 Pure from his arms, and guiltless of his loves. These instant shall be thine; and if the powers Give to our arms proud Ilion's hostile towers, Then shalt thou store (when Greece the spoil divides) With gold and brass thy loaded navy's sides. Besides, full twenty nymphs of Trojan race With copious love shall crown thy warm embrace; Such as thyfelf shalt chuse; who yield to none, Or yield to Helen's heavenly charms alone. Yet hear me farther: when our wars are o'er, If fafe we land on Argos' fruitful shore, There shalt thou live his fon, his honours share, And with Orestes' self divide his care. Yet more-three daughters in his court are bred, And each well worthy of a royal bed; 375 Laodicé and Iphigenia fair, And bright Chrysothemis with golden hair ; Her shalt thou wed whom most thy eyes approve, He asks no presents, no reward for love: Himself will give the dower; so vast a store, 380 As never father gave a child before. Seven ample cities shall confess thy sway, Thee Enopé, and Pheræ thee obey, Cardamylé

Cardamyle with ample nurrets crown'd, And facred Pedafus, for vines renown'd: Æpea fair, the pastures Hira yields, And rich Antheia with her flowery fields: The whole extent to Pylos' fandy plain Along the verdant margin of the main. There heiters graze, and labouring oxen toil; 399 Bold are the men, and generous is the foil. There shalt thou reign with power and justice crown'd, And rule the tributary realms around. Such are the proffers which this day we bring, Such the repentance of a suppliant king. 395 But if all this relentless thou disdain, If honour, and if interest plead in vain; Yet some redress to suppliant Greece afford, And be, amongst her guardian Gods, ador'd. If no regard thy fuffering country claim, 400 Hear thy own glory, and the voice of fame For now that chief, whose unresisted ire Made nations tremble, and whole hofts retire, Proud Hector, now, th' unequal fight demands, And only triumphs to deferve thy hands. 405.

Then thus the Goddess-born. Ulysses, hear
A faithful speech, that knows nor art, nor fear;
What in my secret soul is understood,
My tongue shall utter, and my deeds make good.
Let Greece then know, my purpose I retain:
Nor with new treaties vex my peace in vain.
Who dares think one thing, and another tell,
My heart detests him as the gates of hell.

Then

ILIAD, BOOK IX.

Then thus in fhort my fixt resolves attend, Which nor Atrides, nor his Greeks can bend; Long toils, long perils, in their cause I bore, But now th' unfruitful glories charm no more. Fight or not fight, a like reward we claim, The wretch and hero find their prize the fame; Alike regretted in the dust he lies, Who yields ignobly, or who bravely dies. Of all my dangers, all my glorious pains, A life of labours, lo! what fruit remains? As the bold bird her helpless young attends, From danger guards them, and from want defends; In fearch of prey she wings the spacious air, And with the untafted food supplies her care: For thanklefs Greece fuch hardfhips have Lbrav'd, Her wives, her infants, by my labours fav'd; Long fleepless nights in heavy arms I stood, And fweat laborious days in dust and blood. I fack'd twelve ample cities on the main, And twelve lay fmoaking on the Trojan plain: Then at Atrides' haughty feet were laid The wealth I gather'd, and the spoils I made. Your mighty monarch these in peace possest; Some few my foldiers had, himfelf the reft. Some prefent too to every prince was paid; And every prince enjoys the gift he made; I only must refund, of all his train; See what preheminence our merits gain! My spoil alone his greedy foul delights: My spouse alone must bless his lustful nights:

The woman, let him (as he may) enjoy; But what's the quarrel then of Greece to Troy? 445 What to these shores th' assembled nations draws, What calls for vengeance but a woman's cause? Are fair endowments and a beauteous face Belov'd by none but those of Atreus' race? The wife whom choice and paffion both approve, 450 Sure every wife and worthy man will love. Nor did my fair-one less distinction claim; Slave as fhe was, my foul ador'd the dame. Wrong'd in my love, all proffers I difdain; Deceiv'd for once, I trust not kings again. 455 Ye have my answer-what remains to do, Your king, Ulysses, may consult with you. What needs he the defence this arm can make? Has he not walls no human force can shake? Has he not fenc'd his guarded navy round, With piles, with ramparts, and a trench profound? And will not these (the wonders he has done) Repel the rage of Priam's fingle fon? There was a time ('twas when for Greece I fought) When Hector's prowess no fuch wonders wrought; He kept the verge of Troy, nor dar'd to wait Achilles' fury at the Scæan gate; He try'd it once, and scarce was fay'd by Fate. But now those ancient enmities are o'er; To-morrow we the favouring Gods implore, Then shall you see our parting vessels crown'd, And hear with oars the Hellespont resound. The third day hence, shall Pthia greet our fails, If mighty Neptune fend propitious gales; Pthia

ILIAD, BOOK IX. 281 Pthia to her Achilles shall restore 475 The wealth he left for this detelted shore: Thither the spoils of this long war shall pass, The ruddy gold, the steel, and shining brass; My beauteous captives thither I'll convey, And all that refts of my unravish'd prey. One only valued gift your tyrant gave, And that resum'd, the fair Lyrnessian slave. Then tell him, loud, that all the Greeks may hear, And learn to fcorn the wretch they basely fear; (For, arm'd in impudence, mankind he braves, 485 And meditates new cheats on all his flaves; Though shameless as he is, to face these eyes Is what he dares not; if he dares, he dies) Tell him, all terms, all commerce I decline, Nor share his council, nor his battle join; 490 For once deceiv'd, was his; but twice, were mine. No---let the stupid prince, whom Jove deprives Of sense and justice, run where frenzy drives; His gifts are hateful: kings of fuch a kind Stand but as flaves before a noble mind. Not though he profer'd all himself possest, And all his rapine could from others wrest; Not all the golden tides of wealth that crown The many-peopled Orchomenian town; Not all proud Thebes' unrival'd walls contain, soo The world's great empress on th' Ægyptian plain, (That spreads her conquests o'er a thousand states, And pours her heroes through a hundred gates; Two hundred horsemen, and two hundred cars From each wide portal issuing to the wars) Though

Though bribes were heap'd on bribes, in number	more
Than dust in fields, or fands along the shore;	ET.
Should all these offers for my friendship call;
'Tis he that offers, and I fcorn them all.
Atrides' daughter never shall be led	510
(An ill-match'd confort) to Achilles' bed;
Like golden Venus though he charm'd the heart,	35)
And vy'd with Pallas in the works of art.
Some greater Greek let those high nuptials grace,
I hate alliance with a tyrant's race.	515
If heaven restore me to my realms with life,
The reverend Peleus shall elect my wife.	S.A.
Theffalian nymphs there are, of form divine,	AL.
And kings that fue to mix their blood with mine.
Bleft in kind love, my years shall glide away,	520
Content with just hereditary sway;
There, deaf for ever to the martial strife,	Rt.
Enjoy the dear prerogative of life.	1985
Life is not to be bought with heaps of gold;	2.7
Not all Apollo's Pythian treasures hold,	525
Or Troy once held, in peace and pride of fway,	100
Can bribe the poor possession of a day!	illa"
Lost herds and treasures, we by arms regain,
And steeds unrival'd on the dusty plain :	15"
But from our lips the vital fpirit fled,	530
Returns no more to wake the filent dead.	100
My fates long fince by Thetis were disclos'd,
And each alternate, life or fame propos'd;
Here, if I stay, before the Trojan town,	SEL.
Chart : 1- 1-11 C	535
그 보다 하고 있는 사람들은 사람들은 사람들은 사람들이 되었다.	30

ILIAD, Book IX.

If I return, I quit immortal praise For years on years, and long-extended days. Convinc'd, though late, I find my fond mistake, And warn the Greeks the wifer choice to make: To guit these shores, their native seats enjoy, 5400 Nor hope the fall of heaven-defended Troy. Jove's arm display'd afferts her from the skies; Her hearts are firengthen'd, and her glories rife. Go then, to Greece report our fix'd defign; Bid all your counfels, all your armies join, Let all your forces, all your arts conspire, To fave the ships, the troops, the chiefs from fire. One stratagem has fail'd, and others will: Ye find, Achilles is unconquer'd still. Go then .-- digeft my meffage as ye may-But here this night let reverend Phoenix stay: His tedious toils and hoary hairs demand A peaceful death in Pthia's friendly land. But whether he remain, or fail with me, His age be facred, and his will be-free.

The son of Peleus ceas'd: the chiefs around
In silence wrapt, in consternation drown'd,
Attend the stern reply. Then Phoenix rose;
(Down his white beard a stream of sorrow flows)
And while the fate of suffering Greece he mourn'd,
With accent weak these tender words return'd.

Divine Achilles! wilt thou then retire, And leave our hofts in blood, our fleets on fire? If wrath fo dreadful fill thy ruthlefs mind, How shall thy friend, thy Phoenix, stay behind?

The

T

N

I

T

B

The

The royal Peleus, when from Pthia's coast He fent thee early to th' Achaian host; Thy youth as then in fage debates unskill'd, And new to perils of the direful field: He bade me teach thee all the ways of war; 570 To shine in councils, and in camps to dare. Never, ah never let me leave thy fide! No time shall part us, and no fate divide. Not though the God, that breath'd my life, restore The bloom I boasted, and the port I bore, When Greece of old beheld my youthful flames, (Delightful Greece, the land of lovely dames!) My father, faithless to my mother's arms, Old as he was, ador'd a stranger's charms. I try'd what youth could do (at her defire) To win the damsel, and prevent my sire. My fire with curses loads my hated head, And cries, "Ye furies! barren be his bed." Infernal Jove, the vengeful fiends below, And ruthless Proserpine confirm'd his vow. 585 Despair and grief distract my labouring mind ! Gods! what a crime my impious heart defign'd! I thought (but some kind God that thought supprest) To plunge the poniard in my father's breast : Then meditate my flight; my friends in vain With prayers entreat me, and with force detain. On fat of rams, black bulls, and brawny fwine, They daily feast, with draughts of fragrant wine: Strong guards they plac'd, and watch'd nine nights entire; The roofs and porches flam'd with constant fire.

The tenth, I forc'd the gates unseen of all; And favour'd by the night o'erleap'd the wall. My travels thence through spacious Greece extend; In Pthia's court at last my labours end. Your fire receiv'd me, as his fon carefs, d, 600 With gifts enrich'd, and with poffessions bless'd. The strong Dolopians thenceforth own'd my reign, And all the coast that runs along the main. By love to thee his bounties I repaid, And early wisdom to thy foul convey'd: 605 Great as thou art, my lessons made thee brave, A child I took thee, but a hero gave. Thy infant breast a like affection show'd; Still in my arms (an ever-pleafing load), Or at my knee, by Phænix wouldst thou stand; 610 No food was grateful but from Phœnix' hand. I pass my watchings o'er thy helpless years, The tender labours, the compliant cares; The Gods (I thought) revers'd their hard decree, And Phænix felt a father's joys in thee: 615 Thy growing virtues justify'd my cares, And promis'd comfort to my filver hairs. Now be thy rage, thy fatal rage, refign'd; A cruel heart ill suits a manly mind: The Gods (the only great, and only wife) Are mov'd by offerings, vows, and facrifice; Offending man their high compassion wins, And daily prayers atone for daily fins. Prayers are Jove's daughters, of celeftial race, Lame are their feet, and wrinkled is their face;

With humble mien and with dejected eyes, Constant they follow, where Injustice slies: Injustice swift, erect, and unconfin'd, Sweeps the wide earth, and tramples o'er mankind, While prayers, to heal her wrongs, move flow behind. Who hears these daughters of almighty Jove, For him they mediate to the throne above: When man rejects the humble fuit they make, The fire revenges for the daughter's fake; From Jove commission'd, fierce Injustice then, Descends, to punish unrelenting men. Oh let not headlong passion bear the sway; These reconciling Goddesses obey: Due honours to the feed of Jove belong; Due honours calm the fierce, and bend the ftrong. 640 Were these not paid thee by the terms we bring, Were rage fill harbour'd in the haughty king; Nor Greece, nor all her fortunes, should engage Thy friend to plead against so just a rage. But fince what honour asks, the general fends, And fends by those whom most thy heart commends, The best and noblest of the Grecian train; Permit not these to sue, and sue in vain! Let me (my son) an ancient fact unfold, A great example drawn from times of old; 650 Hear what our fathers were, and what their praise, Who conquer'd their revenge in former days. Where Calydon on rocky mountains stands, Once fought th' Ætolian and Curetian bands; To guard it those, to conquer these advance; And mutual deaths were dealt with mutual chance. The

In

The filver Cynthia bade Contention rife, In vengeance of neglected facrifice; On Oeneus' fields the fent a monftrous boar, That level'd harvests, and whole forests tore: 660 This beaft (when many a chief his tulks had flain) Great Meleager stretch'd along the plain. Then, for his spoils, a new de ate arose, The neighbour nations thence commencing foes. Strong as they were, the bold Curetes fail'd, 665 While Meleager's thundering arm prevail'd: Till rage at length inflam'd his lofty breaft. (For rage invades the wifest and the best.) Curs'd by Althæa, to his wrath he yields, And in his wife's embrace forgets the fields. (She from Marpella sprung, divinely fair, " And matchless Idas, more than man in war; " The God of day ador'd the mother's charms: " Against the God the father bent his arms: Th' afflicted pair, their forrows to proclaim, " From Cleopatra chang'd this daughter's name, " And call'd Alcyone; a name to show "The father's grief, the mourning mother's woe." To her the chief retir'd from stern debate, But found no peace from fierce Althæa's hate: Althæa's hate, th' unhappy warriour drew, Whose luckless hand his royal uncle slew; She beat the ground, and call'd the powers beneath On her own fon to wreak her brother's death: Hell heard her curses from the realms profound, 685

And the red fiends that walk the nightly round.

In vain Ætolia her deliverer waits, War shakes her walls, and thunders at her gates. She fent ambaffadors, a chosen band, Priefts of the Gods, and elders of the land; 690 Befought the chief to fave the finking state: Their prayers were urgent, and their proffers great: (Full fifty acres of the richest ground, Half pasture green, and half with vineyards crown'd.) His fuppliant father, aged Oeneus, came; His fifters follow'd; ev'n the vengeful dame, Althæa sues; his friends before him fall: He stands relentless, and rejects them all. Mean while the victor's shouts ascend the skies; The walls are scal'd; the rolling flames arise; 700 At length his wife (a form divine) appears, With piercing cries, and supplicating tears; She paints the horrours of a conquer'd town, The heroes flain, the palaces o'erthrown, The matrons ravish'd, the whole race enslav'd: 705 The warriour heard, he vanquish'd, and he sav'd. Th' Ætolians, long difdain'd, now took their turn, And left the chief their broken faith to mourn. Learn hence, betimes to curb pernicious ire, Nor stay, till yonder fleets ascend in fire: 710 Accept the prefents; draw thy conquering fword; And be amongst our guardian Gods ador'd. Thus he: the stern Achilles thus reply'd. My fecond father, and my reverend guide: Thy friend, believe me, no fugh gifts demands,

And asks no honours from a mortal's hands :

Jove

love honours me, and favours my defigns; His pleasure guides me, and his will confines: And here I stay, (if such his high behest) While life's warm spirit beats within my breaft. Yet hear one word, and lodge it in thy heart; No more molest me on Atrides' part: Is it for him these tears are taught to flow, For him these forrows? for my mortal foe? A generous friendship no cold medium knows, Burns with one love, with one refentment glows; One should our interests, and our passions be; My friend must hate the man that that injures me. Do this, my Phoenix, tis a generous part; And share my realms, my honours, and my heart. Let these return: our voyage, or our stay, Rest undetermin'd till the dawning day.

He ceas'd: then order'd for the sage's bed A warmer couch with numerous carpets spread. With that, stern Ajax his long silence broke, And thus, impatient, to Ulysses spoke.

Hence let us go---why waste we time in vain?

See what effect our low submissions gain!

Lik'd or not lik'd, his words we must relate,

The Greeks expect them, and our heroes wait,

Proud as he is, that iron-heart retains

Its stubborn purpose, and his friends distains.

Stern, and unpitying! if a brother bleed,

On just atonement, we remit the deed;

A sire the slaughter of his son forgives;

The price of blood discharg'd, the murderer lives:

Vol. I

T1 -

735

The haughtiest hearts at length their rage resign, And gifts can conquer every foul but thine. The Gods that unrelenting breast have steel'd, And curs'd thee with a mind that cannot yield. One woman-flave was ravish'd from thy arms: Lo, feven are offer'd, and of equal charms, Then hear, Achilles! be of better mind; Revere thy roof, and to thy guests be kind; And know the men, of all the Grecian hoft, 755 Who honour worth, and prize thy valour most. Oh foul of battles, and thy people's guide! (To Ajax thus the first of Greeks reply'd) Well hast thou spoke; but at the tyrant's name My rage rekindles, and my foul's on flame: 760 'Tis just refentment, and becomes the brave; Difgrac'd, dishonour'd, like the vilest slave! Return then, heroes! and our answer bear. The glorious combat is no more my care; Not till, amidst you finking navy slain, 765: The blood of Greeks shall dye the sable main; Not till, the flames, by Hector's fury thrown. Confume your veffels, and approach my own; Just there, th' impetuous homicide shall stand, There ccase his battle, and there feel our hand.

This faid, each prince a double goblet crown'd,
And cast a large libation on the ground;
Then to their vessels, through the gloomy shades,
The chiefs return; divine Ulysses leads.
Meantime Achilles' slaves prepar'd a bed,
With sleeces, carpets, and soft linen spread;

There,

780 }

There, till the facred morn restor'd the day,
In sumbers sweet the reverend Phænix lay.
But in his inner tent, an ampler space,
Achilles slept; and in his warm embrace
Fair Diomede of the Lesbian race.

Last, for Patroclus was the couch prepar'd, Whose nightly joys the beauteous Iphis shar'd; Achilles to his friend consign'd her charms, When Scyros fell before his conquering arms.

And now th' elected chiefs, whom Greece had fent, Pass'd through the hosts, and reach'd the royal tent. Then rising all, with goblets in their hands, The peers, and leaders of th' Achaian bands Hail'd their return: Atrides first begun.

Say what success? divine Laertes' son!
Achilles' high resolves declare to all;
Returns the chief, or must our navy fall?

Great king of nations! (Ithacus reply'd) Fix'd is his wrath, unconquer'd is his pride; 795 He flights thy friendship, thy proposals scorns, And, thus implor'd, with fiercer fury burns. To fave our army, and our fleets to free, Is not his care; but left to Greece and thee. Your eyes shall view, when morning paints the sky, Beneath his oars the whitening billows fly, Us too he bids our oars and fails employ, Nor hope the fall of heaven-protected Troy; For Jove o'ershades her with his arm divine, 805 Inspires her war, and bids her glory shine. Such was his word : what farther he declar'd, These facred heralds and great Ajax heard.

: U 2

But

But Phœnix in his tent the chief retains, Safe to transport him to his native plains, When morning dawns: if other he decree, His age is facred, and his choice is free.

Ulyffes ceas'd: the great Achaian hoft, With forrow feiz'd, in consternation lost, Attend the stern reply. Tydides broke The general filence, and undaunted ipoke. 815 Why should we gifts to proud Achilles send? Or strive with prayers his haughty foul to bend? His country's woes he glories to deride, And prayers will burst that swelling heart with pride. Be the fierce impulse of his rage obey'd; Our battles let him, or defert, or aid; Then let him arm when Jove or he think fit; That, to his madness, or to heaven commit: What for ourselves we can, is always ours; This night, let due repast refresh our powers; 825 (For strength consists in spirits and in blood, And those are ow'd to generous wine and food) But when the rofy messenger of day Strikes the blue mountains with her golden ray, Rang'd at the ships, let all our squadrons shine, 830 In flaming arms, a long extended line : In the dread front let great Atrides stand, The first in danger, as in high command. Shouts of acclaim the listening heroes raise, Then each to heaven the due libations pays; 835

Till fleep, descending o'er the tents, bestows The grateful bleffings of defir'd repose.

THE

THE

TENTH BOOK

OF THE

I L I A D.

U 3

THE ARGUMENT.

The Night Adventure of Diomed and Ulysses.

UPON the refusal of Achilles to return to the army, the diffress of Agamemnon is described in the most lively manner. He takes no rest that night, but paffes through the camp, awaking the leaders, and entriving all possible methods for the public fafety. Menelaus, Neftor, Ulyffes, and Diomed, are employed in raising the rest of the captains. They call a council of war, and determine to fend fcouts into the enemy's camp, to learn their posture, and discover their intentions. Diomed undertakes this hazardous enterprize, and makes choice of Ulysses for his companion. In their passage they surprise Dolon, whom Hector had fent on a like defign to the camp of the Grecians. From him they are informed of the situation of the Trojan and auxiliary forces, and particularly of Rhefus, and the Thracians who were They pass on with success; kill lately arrived. Rhefus, with feveral of his officers, and feize the famous horses of that prince, with which they return in triumph to the camp.

The same night continues; the scene lies in the two camps.

THE

I L I A D.

BOOK X.

LL night the chiefs before their vessels lay, And loft in sleep the labours of the day: All but the king; with various thoughts oppreft, ·His country's cares lay rolling in his breaft. As when, by lightnings, Jove's ætherial power Foretells the rattling hail, or weighty shower, Or fends foft fnows to whiten all the shore, Or bids the brazen throat of war to roar; By fits one flash succeeds as one expires, And heaven flames thick with momentary fires. So bursting frequent from Atrides' breast, Sighs following fighs his inward fears confest. Now o'er the fields, dejected, he furveys From thousand Trojan fires the mounting blaze; Hears in the passing wind their musick blow, And marks distinst the voices of the foe. Now looking backwards to the fleet and coaft, Anxious he forrows for th' endanger'd hoft. He rends his hairs in facrifice to love, And fues to him that ever lives above: 20 Inly he groans; while glory and despair Divide his heart, and wage a doubtful war. A thou-

A thousand cares his labouring breast revolves; To feek fage Nestor now the chief resolves, With him, in wholesome counsels, to debate What yet remains to fave th' afflicted state." He rose, and first he cast his mantle round, Next on his feet the shining sandals bound; A lion's yellow spoils his back conceal'd; His warlike hand a pointed javelin held. 30 Mean while his brother, prest with equal woes, Alike deny'd the gifts of foft repose, Laments for Greece; that in his cause before So much had fuffer'd, and must suffer more. A leopard's spotted hide his shoulders spread; A brazen helmet glitter'd on his head : Thus (with a javelin in his hand) he went To wake Atrides in the royal tent. Already wak'd, Atrides he descry'd, His armour buckling at his veffel's fide. Joyful they met; the Spartan thus begun: Why puts my brother his bright armour on? Sends he some spy, amidst these silent hours, To try you camp, and watch the Trojan powers? But fay, what hero shall sustain that task, Such bold exploits uncommon courage ask; Guideless, alone, through night's dark shade to go, And 'midst a hostile camp explore the foe. To whom the king. In fuch diffress we stand, No vulgar counsels our affairs demand; 50 Greece to preserve, is now no easy part,

But asks high wisdom, deep design, and art.

For Jove averse our humble prayer denies,
And bows his head to Hector's sacrifice.

What eye has witness'd, or what ear believ'd,
In one great day, by one great arm atchiev'd,
Such wondrous deeds as Hector's hand has done,
And we beheld, the last revolving sun

What honours the belov'd of Jove adorn!

Sprung from no God, and of no Goddess born,
Yet such his acts, as Greeks unborn shall tell,
And cutse the battle where their fathers fell.

Now speed thy hafty course along the fleet, There call great Ajax, and the prince of Crete; Ourfelf to hoary Neftor will repair; To keep the guards on duty, be his care; (For Nestor's influence best that quarter guides, Whose fon with Merion o'er the watch, presides.) To whom the Spartan: These thy orders borne, Say shall I stay, or with dispatch return? There shalt thou stay, (the king of men reply'd) Else may we miss to meet, without a guide, The paths fo many, and the camp fo wide. Still, with your voice, the flothful foldiers raife, Urge, by their father's fame, their future praise. Forget we now our state and lofty birth; Not titles here, but works must prove our worth. To labour is the lot of man below; And when Jove gave us life, he gave us woe.

This faid, each parted to his several cares; The king to Nestor's sable ship repairs; The sage protector of the Greeks he found Stretch'd in his bed with all his arms around;

The 80

75

The various-colour'd scarf, the shield he rears, The shining helmet, and the pointed spears: The dreadful weapons of the warriour's rage, That, old in arms, disdain'd the peace of age. Then leaning on his hand his watchful head, The hoary monarch rais'd his eyes, and said,

What art thou, speak, that on designs unknown, 90 While others sleep, thus range the camp alone; Seek'st thou some friend, or nightly centinel? Stand off, approach not, but thy purpose tell.

O fon of Neleus (thus the king rejoin'd) Pride of the Greeks, and glory of thy kind! Lo here the wretched Agamemnon stands, Th' unhappy general of the Grecian bands; Whom Jove decrees with daily cares to bend, And woes, that only with his life shall end! Scarce can my knees these trembling limbs sustain, 100 And scarce my heart support its load of pain. No taste of sleep these heavy eyes have known; Confus'd, and fad, I wander thus alone, With fears distracted, with no fix'd defign; And all my people's miseries are mine. 105 If aught of use thy waking thoughts suggest, (Since cares, like mine, deprive thy foul of rest) Impart thy counsel, and affift thy friend; Now let us jointly to the trench defcend, At every gate the fainting guard excite, 110 Tir'd with the toils of day and watch of night; Else may the sudden foe our works invade, So near, and favour'd by the gloomy shade.

ILIAD, BOOK X.

To him thus Nestor. Trust the powers above, Nor think proud Hector's hopes confirm'd by Jove; How ill agree the views of vain mankind, And the wife counsels of th' eternal mind? Audacious Hector, if the Gods ordain, That great Achilles rife and rage again, What toils attend thee, and what woes remain! Lo faithful Nestor thy command obeys; The care is next our other chiefs to raife: Ulysses, Diomed, we chiefly need; Meges for strength, O'leus fam'd for speed. Some other be dispatch'd of nimbler feet, To those tall ships, remotest of the fleet, Where lye great Ajax, and the king of Crete. To rouse the Spartan I myself decree; Dear as he is to us, and dear to thee, Yet must I tax his sloth, that claims no share With his great brother in this martial care; Him it behov'd to every chief to fue, Preventing every part perform'd by you; For strong necessity our toils demands, Claims all our hearts, and urges all our hands.

To whom the king: With reverence we allow
Thy just rebukes, yet learn to spare them now.
My generous brother is of gentle kind,
He seems remiss, but bears a valiant mind;
Through too much deference to our sovereign sway,
Content to follow when we lead the way.
But now, our ills industrious to prevent,
Long ere the rest, he rose, and sought my tent.

The

The chiefs you nam'd, already at his call, Prepare to meet us near the navy wall; Assembling there, between the trench and gates, Near the night-guards, our chosen council waits.

Then none (faid Nestor) shall his rule withstand,

For great examples justify command.

With that the venerable warriour rose; 150 The shining greaves his manly legs inclose; His purple mantle golden buckles join'd, Warm with the foftest wool, and doubly lin'd. Then, rushing from his tent, he snatch'd in haste His steely lance, that lighten'd as he past. 155 The camp he travers'd through the fleeping croud, Stop'd at Ulysses' tent, and call'd aloud. Ulysses, sudden as the voice was sent, Awakes, starts up, and issues from his tent. What new distress, what sudden cause of fright, Thus leads you wandering in the filent night? Q prudent chief! (the Pylian fage reply'd) Wife as thou art, be now thy wisdom try'd: Whatever means of fafety can be fought, Whatever counsels can inspire our thought, 165 Whatever methods, or to fly or fight; All, all depend on this important night!

He heard, return'd, and took his painted shield:
Then join'd the chiefs, and follow'd through the sield.
Without his tent, bold Diomed they found,
170
All sheath'd in arms, his brave companions round:
Each sunk in sleep, extended on the field,
His head reclining on his bossy shield.

A wood

145

A wood of spears stood by, that, fixt upright,
Shot from their flashing points a quivering light.
A bull's black hide compos'd the hero's bed;
A splendid carpet roll'd beneath his head.
Then, with his foot, old Nestor gently shakes.
The slumbering chief, and in these words awakes.

Rise, son of Tydeus! to the brave and strong
Rest seems inglorious, and the night too long.
But sleep'st thou now? when from you hill the foe
Hangs o'er the sleet, and shades our walls below?

At this, foft flumber from his eyelids fled; The warriour faw the hoary chief, and faid, 135 'Wondrous old man! whose foul no respite knows, Though years and honours bid thee feek repofe. Let younger Greeks our fleeping warriours wake; Ill fits thy age these toils to undertake. My friend, (he answer'd) generous is thy care, These toils, my subjects and my sons might bear, Their loyal thoughts and pious loves conspire To ease a sovereign, and relieve a fire. But now the last despair furrounds our host; No hour must pass, no moment must be lost; 195 Each fingle Greek, in this conclusive strife, Stands on the sharpest edge of death or life: Yet, if my years thy kind regard engage, Employ thy youth as I employ my age; Succeed to these my cares, and rouse the rest; 200 He ferves me most, who ferves his country best.

This faid, the hero o'er his shoulders flung A lion's spoils, that to his ancles hung; Then seiz'd his pondrous lance, and strode along. Meges the bold, with Ajax fam'd for speed, The warriour rous'd, and to th' entrenchments led.

And now the chiefs approach the nightly guard; A wakeful fquadron, each in arms prepar'd: Th' unweary'd watch their listening leaders keep, And, couching close, repel invading fleep. 210 So faithful dogs their fleecy charge maintain, With toil protected from the prowling train, When the gaunt lioness, with hunger bold, Springs from the mountains toward the guarded fold: Through breaking woods her ruftling course they hear; Loud, and more loud, the clamours strike their ear Of hounds and men; they start, they gaze around, Watch every fide, and turn to every found. Thus watch'd the Greçians, cautious of furprize, Each voice, each motion, drew their ears and eyes; Each step of passing feet increas'd th' affright; And hostile Troy was ever full in fight. Neftor with joy the wakeful band furvey'd, And thus accosted through the gloomy shade. 'Tis well, my fons! your nightly cares employ; Else must our host become the scorn of Troy. Watch thus, and Greece shall live --- The hero faid; Then o'er the trench the following chieftains led. His fon, and god-like Merion march'd behind, (For these the princes to their council join'd) The trenches past, th' affembled kings around In filent state the confistory crown'd. A place there was yet undefil'd with gore, The spot where Hector stop'd his rage before;

When

When night descending, from his vengeful hand 235.
Repriev'd the relicks of the Grecian band:
(The plain beside with mangled corpse was spread,
And all his progress mark'd by heaps of dead.)
There sat the mournful kings: when Neleus' son
The council opening, in these words begun.

Is there (faid he) a chief fo greatly brave, His life to hazard, and his country fave? Lives there a man, who fingly dares to go To yonder camp, or feize some straggling foe? Or favour'd by the night approach fo near, Their speech, their counsels, and designs to hear? If to beliege our navies they prepare, Or Troy once more must be the seat of war? This could he learn, and to our peers recite, And pass unharm'd the dangers of the night; 250: What fame were his through all fucceeding days, While Phœbus shines, or men have tongues to praise? What gifts his grateful country would befrow? What must not Greece to her deliverer owe? A fable ewe each leader should provide, With each a fable lambkin by her fide; At every rite his share should be increas'd, And his the foremost honours of the feast. Fear held them muse; alone, untaught to fear, Tydides spoke-The man you feek, is here. Through yon black camps to bend my dangerous way, Some God within commands, and I obey. But let some other chosen warriour join, To raife my hopes, and fecond my defign.

By mutual confidence, and mutual aid, 265 Great deeds are done, and great discoveries made; The wise new prudence from the wise acquire, And one brave hero fans another's fire.

Contending leaders at the word arose: Each generous breast with emulation glows: 270 So brave a talk each Ajax strove to share, Bold Merion strove, and Nestor's valiant heir; The Spartan wish'd the second place to gain, And great Ulysses wish'd, nor wish'd in vain. Then thus the king of men the contest ends: 275 Thou first of warriours, and thou best of friends, Undaunted Diomed! what chief to join In this great enterprise, is only thine. Just be thy choice, without affection made; To birth, or office, no respect be paid; 280 Let worth determine here. The monarch spake, And inly trembled for his brother's fake.

Then thus (the god-like Diomed rejoin'd)

My choice declares the impulse of my mind,

How can I doubt while great Ulysses stands

To lend his counsels, and assist our hands?

A chief, whose safety is Minerva's care;

So fam'd, so dreadful, in the works of war:

Blest in his conduct, I no aid require;

Wisdom like his might pass through slames of fire. 290

It fits thee not, before these chiefs of fame, (Reply'd the sage) to praise me, or to blame: Praise from a friend, or censure from a foe, Are lost on hearers that our merits know.

But

ILIAD, BOOK X.

305

But let us haste—Night rolls the hours away,
The reddening Orient shows the coming day,
The stars shine fainter on th' æthereal plains,
And of Night's empire but a third remains.

Thus having spoke, with generous ardour prest, In arms terrific their huge limbs they dreft. 300 A two-edg'd faulchion Thrafymed the brave, And ample buckler to Tydides gave: Then in a leathern helm he cas'd his head, Short of its creft, and with no plume o'erfpread : (Such as by youths unus'd to arms are worn; 305 No spoils enrich it, and no fluds adorn.) Next him Ulyffes took a shining sword, A bow and quiver, with bright arrows stor'd: A well-prov'd cafque, with leather braces bound, (Thy gift, Meriones) his temples crown'd; Soft wool within; without, in order spread, A boar's white teeth grinn'd horrid o'er his head. This from Amyntor, rich Ormenus' fon, Autolychus by fraudful rapine won, And gave Amphidamas; from him the prize Molus receiv'd the pledge of focial ties; The helmet next by Merion was posses'd, And now Ulysses' thoughtful temples press'd. Thus sheath'd in arms, the council they forsake, And dark through paths oblique their progress take. Just then, in fign she favour'd their intent, A long-wing'd heron great Minerva sent: This, though furrounding shades obscur'd their view, By the shrill clang, and whistling wings, they knew. YOL, I.

As from the right she soar'd, Ulysses pray'd, 325. Hail'd the glaid omen, and address'd the Maid.

O daughter of that God, whose arm can wield
Th' avenging bolt, and shake the dreadful shield!
O thou! for ever present in my way,
Who, all my motions, all my toils survey!
Safe may we pass beneath the gloomy shade,
Safe by thy succour to our ships convey'd;
And let some deed this signal night adorn,
To claim the tears of Trojans yet unborn.

Then god-like Diomed prefer'd his prayer: 335 Daughter of Jove, unconquer'd Pallas! hear. Great Queen of arms, whose favour Tydeus won, As thou defend'st the fire, defend the son. When on Æsopus' banks the banded powers Of Greece he left, and fought the Theban towers, . Peace was his charge; receiv'd with peaceful show, He went a legate, but return'd a foe: Then help'd by thee, and cover'd by thy fhield, He fought with numbers, and made numbers yield. So now be present, Oh celestial Maid! 345 So still continue to the race thine aid! A youthful steer shall fall beneath the stroke, Untam'd, unconscious of the galling yoke, With ample forehead, and with spreading horns, Whose taper tops refulgent gold adorns.

The heroes pray'd and Pallas from the skies;
Accords their vow, succeeds their enterprize.

Now, like two lions panting for the prey,
With deathful thoughts they trace the dreary way,

Through

Through the black horrours of th' enfanguin'd plain, Through dust, through blood, o'er arms and hills of Nor less bold Hector, and the fons of Troy, Islain. On high defigns the wakeful hours employ; Th' affembled peers their lofty chief inclos'd : Who thus the counsels of his breast propos'd. What glorious man, for high attempts prepar'd, Dares greatly venture for a rich reward? Of yonder fleet a bold discovery make, What watch they keep, and what refolves they take? If now subdued they meditate their flight, And spent with toil neglect the watch of night? His be the chariot that shall please him most, Of all the plunder of the vanguish'd host; His the fair steeds that all the rest excel. And his the glory to have ferv'd fo well. A youth there was among the tribes of Troy, Dolon his name, Eumedes' only boy. (Five girls beside the reverend herald told) Rich was the fon in brafs, and rich in gold; Not bleft by nature with the charms of face, But swift of foot, and matchless in the race. Hector! (he faid) my courage bids me meet This high atchievement, and explore the fleet But first exalt thy scepter to the skies, And fwear to grant me the demanded prize; 380 Th' immortal coursers, and the glittering car, That bear Pelides through the ranks of war. Encourag'd thus, no idle fcout I go,

X 2

Fulfil thy wish, their whole intention know,

Ev'n

Ev'n to the royal tent pursue my way,	Media da 38
And all their counsels, all their aims bet
'The chief then heav'd the golden scept	er high,
Attesting thus the monarch of the sky.	urolish Haid

Be witness thou! immortal Lord of all!

Whose thunder shakes the dark aerial hall:

By none but Dolon shall this prize be borne,

And him alone th' immortal steeds adorn.

Thus Hector fwore: the Gods were call'd in vain,
But the rash youth prepares to scour the plain:
Across his back the bended bow he slung,
A wolf's grey hide around his shoulders hung,
A ferret's downy fur his helmet lin'd,
And in his hand a pointed javelin shin'd.
Then (never to return) he sought the shore,
And trod the path his feet must tread no more.
Scarce had he pass'd the steeds and Trojan throng
(Still bending forward as he cours'd along),
When, on the hollow way, th' approaching tread
Ulysses mark'd, and thus to Diomed.

O friend! I hear some step of hostile seet,
Moving this way, or hastening to the sleet;
Some spy perhaps, to lurk beside the main;
Or nightly pillager that strips the slain.
Yet let him pass, and win a little space;
Then rush behind him, and prevent his pace.
But if too swift of soot he slies before,
Consine his course along the sleet and shore,
Betwixt the camp and him our spears employ,
And intercept his hop'd return to Troy.

With

With that they stepp'd aside, and stoop'd their head (As Dolon pass'd) behind a heap of dead: Along the path the fpy unwary flew; Soft, at just distance, both the chiefs pursue. So distant they, and fuch the space between, As when two teams of mules divide the green (To whom the hind like shares of land allows), When now new furrows part th' approaching ploughs. Now Dolon liftening heard them as they paft; Hector (he thought) had fent, and check'd his hafte, Tillsfcarce at distance of a javelin's throw, No voice succeeding, he perceiv'd the foe. As when two skilful hounds the leveret wind; Or chace through woods obscure the trembling hind; Now loft, now feen, they intercept his way, And from the herd still turn the flying prey : So fast, and with such fears, the Trojan flew; So close, so constant, the bold Greeks purfue. Now almost on the fleet the dastard falls, And mingles with the guards that watch the walls; When brave Tydides stop'd; a generous thought 435 (Inspir'd by Pallas) in his bosom wrought, Lest on the foe some forward, Greek advance, And fnatch the glory from his lifted lance. Then thus aloud: Whoe'er thou art, remain; This javelin elfe shall fix thee to the plain. He faid, and high in air the weapon-cast, Which wilful err'd, and o'er his shoulder past; Then fix'd in earth. Against the trembling wood The wretch stood prop'd, and quiver'd as he stood; X 3

POPE'S HOMER.

310

A sudden palfy seiz'd his turning head;
His loose teeth chatter'd, and his colour fled:
The panting warriours seize him as he stands,
And with unmanly tears his life demands.

O spare my youth, and for the breath I owe, Large gifts of price my father shall bestow. Vast heaps of brass shall in your ships be told, And steel well-temper'd, and refulgent gold.

To whom Ulysses made this wise reply;
Who'er thou art, be bold, nor fear to die.
What moves thee, say, when sleep has clos'd the sight,
To roam the silent fields in dead of night?
Cam'st thou the secrets of our camp to find,
By Hector prompted, or thy daring mind?
Or art some wretch by hopes of plunder led Through heaps of carnage to despoil the dead?

460

Then thus pale Dolon with a fearful look,
(Still as he spoke, his limbs with horrour shook)
Hither I came, by Hector's words deceiv'd;
Much did he promise, rashly I believ'd:
No less a bribe than great Achilles' car,
And those swift steeds that sweep the ranks of war,
Urg'd me, unwilling, this attempt to make;
To learn what counsels, what resolves you take:
If, now subdued, you six your hopes on slight,
And tir'd with toils, neglect the watch of night? 576

Bold was thy aim, and glorious was the prize!
(Ulysses, with a scornful smile, replies)
Far other rulers those proud steeds demand,
And scorn the guidance of a vulgar hand;

Ev'n

Ev'n great Achilles scarce their rage can tame,
Achilles sprung from an immortal dame.
But say, be faithful, and the truth recite!
Where lies encamp'd the Trojan chief to-night?
Where stand his coursers? in what quarter sleep
Their other princes? tell what watch they keep: 480
Say, since their conquest, what their counsels are;
Or here to combat, from their city far,
Or back to Ilion's walls transfer the war.

What Dolon knows, his faithful tongue shall own.

Hector, the peers assembling in his tent,

A council holds at Ilus' monument.

No certain guards the nightly watch partake;

Where-e'er you fires ascend, the Trojans wake:

Anxious for Troy, the guard the natives keep;

Safe in their cares, th' auxiliar forces sleep,

Whose wives and infants, from the danger far,

Discharge their souls of half the fears of war.

Then fleep those aids among the Trojan train, (Enquir'd the chief) or scatter'd o'er the plain? 495

To whom the fpy: Their powers they thus dispose: The Pæons, dreadful with their bended bows, The Carians, Caucons, the Pelasgian host, And Leleges, encamp along the coast.

Not distant far, lie higher on the land 500 The Lycian, Mysian, and Mæonian band, And Phrygia's horse, by Thymbras' ancient wall; The Thracians utmost, and apart from all.

These Troy but lately to her succour won; Led on by Rhesus, great Eioneus' son:

X 4

I faw

I faw his coursers in proud triumph go,
Swift as the wind, and white as winter-snow:
Rich silver plates his shining car infold;
His solid arms, resulgent, slame with gold;
No mortal shoulders suit the glorious load,
Celestial Panoply, to grace a God!
Let me, unhappy, to your sleet be borne,
Or leave me here, a captive's fate to mourn,
In cruel chains; till your return reveal,
The truth or salschood of the news I tell.

To this Tydides, with a gloomy frown:
Think not to live, though all the truth be shown:
Shall we dismiss thee, in some future strife
To risk more bravely thy now forfeit life?
Or that again our camps thou may'st explore?
520
No---once a traitor, thou betray'st no more.

Sternly he spoke, and as the wretch prepar'd
With humble blandishment to stroke his beard,
Like lightning swift the wrathful faulchion slew,
Divides the neck, and cuts the nerves in two;
One instant snatch'd his trembling soul to hell,
The head, yet speaking, mutter'd as it fell.
The furry helmet from his brow they tear,
The wolf's grey hide, th' unbesided bow and spear;
These great Ulysses lifting to the skies,

To favouring Pallas dedicates the prize.

Great queen of arms! receive this hostile spoil, And let the Thracian steeds reward our toil: Thee first of all the heavenly host we praise; O speed our labours, and direct our ways!

This

This faid, the spoils with dropping gore defac'd, High on a spreading tamarisk he plac'd; Then heap'd with reeds and gather'd boughs the plain, To guide their sootsteps to the place again.

Through the ftill night they crofs the devious fields Slippery with blood, o'er arms and heaps of shields, Arriving where the Thracian squadrons lay, And eas'd in fleep the labours of the day. Rang'd in three lines they view the proftrate band : The horses yok'd beside each warriour stand; 545 Their arms in order on the ground reclin'd, Through the brown shade the fulgid weapons shin'd; Amidit lay Rhefus, ftretch'd in fleep profound, And the white fleeds behind his chariot bound. The welcome fight Ulysses first descries, 550 And points to Diomed the tempting prize. The man, the courfers, and the car behold! Describ'd by Dolon, with the arms of gold. Now, brave Tydides! now thy courage try, Approach the chariot, and the steeds untie; 555 Or if thy foul aspire to fiercer deeds, Urge thou the flaughter, while I feize the fleeds.

Pallas (this faid) her hero's bosom warms,
Breath'd in his heart, and strung his nervous arms;
Where-e'er he pass'd, a purple stream pursued;
His thirsty faulchion, fat with hostile blood,
Bath'd all his footsteps, dy'd the fields with gore,
And a low groan remurmur'd through the shore.
So the grim lion, from his nightly den,
O'erleaps the sences, and invades the pen;

565

On sheep or goats, refiftless in his way, He falls, and foaming rends the guardless prey. Nor ftopp'd the fury of his vengeful hand, Till twelve lay breathless of the Thracian band. Ulysses following, as his partner slew, 570 Back by the foot each flaughter'd warriour drew; The milk-white courfers studious to convey Safe to the ships, he wifely clear'd the way; Left the fierce fleeds, not yet to battles bred, Should start, and tremble at the heaps of dead. 575 Now twelve dispatch'd, the monarch last they found; Tydides' faulchion fix'd him to the ground. Just then a deathful dream Minerva sent; A warlike form appear'd before his tent, Whose visionary steel his bosom tore: So dream'd the monarch, and awak'd no more. Ulysses now the snowy steeds detains, And leads them, fasten'd by the filver reins; These, with his bow unbent, he lash'd along; (The scourge forgot, on Rhefus' chariot hung.) 585 Then gave his friend the fignal to retire; But him, new dangers, new achievements fire: Doubtful he flood, or with his reeking blade To fend more heroes to th' infernal shade, Drag off the car where Rhefus' armour lay, 590 Or heave with manly force, and lift away. While unresolv'd the son of Tydeus stands, Pallas appears, and thus her chief commands. Enough, my fon; from farther slaughter cease, Regard thy fafety, and depart in peace; 595 Hafte

2

1

I

S

I

7

7

1

Haste to the ships, the gotten spoils enjoy, Nor tempt too far the hestile Gods of Troy.

The voice divine confess'd the martial Maid; In haste he mounted, and her word obey'd; The coursers sly before Ulysies' bow, Swift as the wind, and white as winter-snow.

Not unobserv'd they pass'd: the God of light Had watch'd his Troy, 'and mark'd Minerva's flight, Saw Tydeus' fon with heavenly fuccour bleft, And vengeful anger fill'd his facred breaft. Swift to the Trojan camp descends the Power, And wakes Hippocoon in the morning-hour, (On Rheuss' fide accurrom'd to attend, A faithful kinfman, and instructive friend.) He rose and saw the field deform'd with blood, 610 An empty space where late the coursers stood, The yet-warm Thracians panting on the coaft; For each he wept, but for his Rhesus most: Now while on Rhefus' name he calls in vain, The gathering tumult spreads o'er all the plain; 615 On heaps the Trojans rush, with wild affright, And wondering view the flaughters of the night.

Meanwhile the chiefs arriving at the shade

Where late the spoils of Hector's spy were laid,

Ulysses stopp'd; to him Tydides bore

The trophy, dropping yet with Dolon's gore:

Then mounts again; again their nimble feet

The coursers ply, and thunder tow'rds the fleet.

Old Nestor first perceiv'd th' approaching sound,
Bespeaking thus the Grecian peers around.

Methiaks

EVVIOLEVE .

POPE'S HOMER.

Methinks the noise of trampling steeds I hear; Thickening this way, and gathering on my ear; Perhaps some horses of the Trojan breed (So may, ye Gods! my pious hopes succeed) The great Tydides and Ulysses bear, 630 Return'd triumphant with this prize of war. Yet much I fear (ah, may that fear be vain! The chiefs out-number'd by the Trojan train; Perhaps, ev'n now purfued, they feek the shore; Or, oh! perhaps thef: heroes are no more. Scarce had he spoke, when lo! the chiefs appear, And spring to earth; the Greeks dismiss their fear: With words of friendship and extended hands They greet the kings; and Neftor first demands: Say thou, whose praises all our host proclaim, 640 Thou living glory of the Grecian name! Say whence these coursers? by what chance bestow'd? The spoil of foes, or present of a God? Not those fair steeds so radiant and so gay, That draw the burning chariot of the day. Old as I am, to age I fcorn to yield, And daily mingle in the martial field; But fure till now no courfers ftruck my fight Like these, conspicuous through the ranks of fight. Some God, I deem, conferr'd the glorious prize, 650 Bleft as ye are; and favourites of the skies; The care of him who bids the thunder roar. And * her, whose fury bathes the world with gore, Father! not fo, (fage Ithacus rejoin'd) The gifts of heaven are of a nobler kind. 655

H

T

T

A

B

H

T

T

T

A

Of

· Minerya,

Of Thracian lineage are the steeds ye view,
Whose hossile king the brave Tydides slew;
Sleeping he dy'd, with all his guards around,
And twelve beside lay gasping on the ground.
These other spoils from conquer'd Dolon came,
A wretch, whose swiftness was his only fame,
By Hector sent our forces to explore,
He now lies headless on the the sandy shore.

Then o'er the trench the bounding coursers flew;
The joyful Greeks with loud acclaim pursue. 665
Straight to Tydides' high pavilion borne,
The matchless steeds his ample stall adorn:
The neighing coursers their new fellows greet,
And the full racks are heap'd with generous wheat.
But Dolon's armour, to his ships convey'd, 670
High on the painted stern Ulysses laid,
A trophy destin'd to the blue-ey'd Maid.

Now from nocturnal sweat, and sanguine stain,
They cleanse their bodies in the neighbouring main:
Then in the polish'd bath, refresh'd from toil,
Their joints they supple with dissolving oil,
In due repast indulge the genial hour,
And first to Pallas the libations pour:
They sit, rejoicing in her aid divine,
And the crown'd goblet foams with sloods of wine.

TOTAL PROPERTY OF A TULE 413 Of Thursday Books As the Carly very low, More training to the ashiber's svenients good slitted sicily Slotging the dy the with at his grandal assured. See all he word and the saiding vel shaed or hard had These when spoils from your al Dolon come, 669 A wretch, whete two inches was his only hane, and the By Heffor Lancour in cre in explore, See it will be seen He new lies hearth-to our the the fluidy those. was arrows and mand are done district and all The joyful Greeks with bad areasin quitee. 503 reactive a raid coloby lost maint. I he matchlefs fleeds has small fall neora : The anishing courters their new rellows meet, And the full epola are being dwith generous where Tur Delen's stranger, to the thirs convey di Bigh on the painted their Ulyfier laid. A nophy design & to all the are Maries to the Nov from noffernal force, and funguine fiale, They clean their begins in the pendition incoming Then by the politic death, refined I from Lad, 6575 Their joints they Topped to the different all, In decrept indules the reciti form, I selled to Part to Particular and the Control from Inch. I have been a dealers and of which and provided and you I to a la check street is the left I must sell ball the state broke, while our ways are as well as anr - - - -

THE AROUMENT.

The third Dattle, and the Ada of Agenternan

A provided the control of the contro

ELEVENTH BOOK

and the return him. Here comes again Ajas, but her her comes again Ajas, but her her alone or a mid which who alone or a mid which who can the analysis of the second or a percent with an arrowally force and carried from the continuous or and carried from the continuous or and carried from the continuous and carried from the carried from the continuous and carried from the ca Deprecies (who evertoes a large of the large of the war and would be a wounded in their manner a secretar extension that it is needed on the second of the second occupation occupation occupations.

That hask opens were the time and twantous by the come to be store day, with its various is come to person a second that one and the come of the come to the come to the come of the

THE ARGUMENT.

The third Battle, and the Acts of Agamemnon.

Agamemnon having armed himself, leads the Grecians to battle: Hector prepares the Trojans to receive them; while Jupiter, Juno, and Minerva, give the fignals of war. Agamemnon bears all before him; and Hector is commanded by Jupiter (who fends Iris for that purpose) to decline the engagement, till the king shall be wounded and retire from the field. He then makes a great flaughter of the enemy; Ulysfes and Diomed put a stop to him for a time; but the latter being wounded by Paris, is obliged to defert his companion, who is encompassed by the Trojans, wounded, and in the utmost danger, till Menelaus and Ajax rescue him. Hector comes against Ajax; but that hero alone opposes multitudes, and rallies the Greeks. In the mean time Machaon, in the other wing of the army, is pierced with an arrow by Paris, and carried from the fight in Neltor's chariot. Achilles (who overlooked the action from his ship) fent Patroclus to enquire which of the Greeks was wounded in that manner? Neftor entertains him in his tent with an account of the accidents of the day, and a long recital of some former wars which he remembered, tending to put Patroclus upon persuading Achilles to fight for his countrymen, or at least permit Him to do it, clad in Achilles's armour. Patroclus in his return meets Eurypylus also wounded, and affifts him in that diffress.

T

H

SI

11

T

W

Ea

No Bu

W

Hi

Hi

This book opens with the eight and twentieth day of the poem; and the same day, with its various actions and adventures, is extended through the twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth, fixteenth, seventeenth, and part of the eighteenth books. The scene lies in the field, near the monument of Ilus.

[ 321 ]

THE

ILIAD.

BOOK XI.

HE faffron morn, with early blushes spread, Now rose refulgent from Tithonius' bed; With new-born day to gladden mortal fight, And gild the courts of heaven with facred light: When baleful Eris, fent by Jove's command. The torch of discord blazing in her hand, Through the red skies her bloody sign extends, And wrapt in tempests, o'er the fleet descends. High on Ulysses' bark, her horrid stand She took, and thunder'd through the feas and land. 10 Ev'n Ajax and Achilles heard the found, Whose ships, remote, the guarded navy bound. Thence the black Fury through the Grecian throng With horror founds the loud Orthian fong: The navy shakes, and at the dire alarms Each bosom boils, each warriour starts to arms. No more they figh, inglorious to return, But breathe revenge, and for the combat burn. The king of men his hardy hofts inspires With loud command, with great example fires; Himself first rose, himself before the rest His mighty limbs in radiant armour dreft.

And

VOL. I.

And first he cas'd his manly legs around In fhining greaves, with filver buckles bound: The beaming cuirass next adorn'd his breast, 25 The fame which once king Cinyras possest: (The fame of Greece and her affembled hoft Had reach'd that monarch on the Cyprian coast; 'Twas then, the friendship of the chief to gain, This glorious gift he fent, nor fent in vain.) Ten rows of azure fteel the work infold, Twice ten of tin, and twelve of ductile gold; Three glittering dragons to the gorget rife, Whose imitated scales, against the skies Reflected various light, and arching bow'd, Like colour'd rainbows o'er a showery cloud. (Jove's wondrous bow, of three celestial dyes, Plac'd as a fign to man amid the fkies.) A radiant baldrick o'er his shoulder ty'd, Sustain'd the fword that glitter'd at his fide: Gold was the hilt, a filver fheath encas'd The shining blade, and golden hangers grac'd. His buckler's mighty orb was next display'd, That round the warriour cast a dreadful shade; Ten zones of brafs its ample brim furround, And twice ten boffes the bright convex crown'd: Tremendous Gorgon frown'd upon its field, And circling terrors fill'd th' expressive shield: Within its concave hung a filver thong, On which a mimic ferpent creeps along, 50 His azure length in easy waves extends, Till in three heads th' embroider'd monfter ends.

Laft

ILIAD, Book Al.	323
Last o'er his brows his fourfold helm he plac'd, With nodding horse-hair formidably grac'd;	ions f
And in his hands two steely javelins wields,	SHALL
That blaze to heaven, and lighten all the fields.	55
That instant Juno and the martial Maid
In happy thunders promis'd Greece their aid;
High o'er the chief they clash'd their arms in air,
And, leaning from the clouds, expect the war.	60
Close to the limits of the trench and mound,
The fiery coursers to their chariots bound
The squires restrain'd: the foot, with those who v	vield
The lighter arms, rush forward to the field.	Constitution of
To fecond these, in close array combin'd,	65
The fquadrons spread their sable wings behind.	1000
Now shouts and tumults wake the tardy fun,
As with the light the warriour's toils begun.	4155
Ev'n Jove, whose thunder spoke his wrath, distill'	d
Red drops of blood o'er all the fatal field;	70
The woes of men unwilling to furvey,
And all the saughters that must stain the day.
Near Ilus' tomb in order rang'd around,
The Trojan lines posses'd the rising ground,
There wife Polydamas and Hector stood;
Æneas, honour'd as a guardian God;	75
Bold Polybus, Agenor the divine;
The brother warriours of Antenor's line;
With youthful Acamas, whose beauteous face
And fair proportion match'd th' etherial race;
Great Hector, cover'd with his spacious shield,	80
Plies all the troops, and orders all the field.
Y 2	As

As the red ftar now shows his sanguine fires Through the dark clouds, and now in night retires; Thus through the ranks appear'd the god-like man, Plung'd in the rear, or blazing in the van; While streamy sparkles, restless as he flies, Flash from his arms as lightning from the skies. As fweating reapers in some wealthy field, Rang'd in two bands, their crooked weapons wield, Bear down the furrows, till their labours meet; Thick fall the heapy harvest at their feet: So Greece and Troy the field of war divide, And falling ranks are ftrow'd on every fide. None stoop'd a thought to base inglorious flight; But horse to horse, and man to man they fight. Not rabid wolves more fierce contest their prey; Each wounds, each bleeds, but none refign the day. Discord with joy the scene of death descries, And drinks large flaughter at her fanguine eyes : Diffcord alone, of all th' immortal train, Swells the red horrours of this direful plain : The Gods in peace their golden mansions fill, Rang'd in bright order on th' Olympian hill; But general murmurs told their griefs above, 105 And each accus'd the partial will of Jove. Meanwhile apart, fuperior, and alone, Th' eternal Monarch, on his awful throne, Wrapt in the blaze of boundless glory fat; And, fix'd, fulfill'd the just decrees of fate. 110 On earth he turn'd his all-confidering eyes, And mark'd the spot where Ilion's towers arise;

The

The fea with ships, the fields with armies spread, The victor's rage, the dying and the dead.

Thus while the morning-beams increasing bright 115 O'er heaven's pure azure spread the growing light, Commutual death the fate of war confounds. Each adverse battle gor'd with equal wounds. But now (what time in some sequester'd vale The weary woodman spreads his sparing meal, 120 When his tir'd arms refuse the ax to rear, And claim a respite from the sylvan war; But not till half the proftrate forests lay Stretch'd in long ruin, and expos'd to day) Then, nor till then, the Greeks' impulsive might 125 Pierc'd the black Phalanx, and let in the light. Great Agamemnon then the flaughter led, And flew Bienor at his people's head: Whose squire Oileus, with a sudden spring, Leap'd from the chariot to revenge his king, But in his front he felt the fatal wound, Which pierc'd his brain, and stretch'd him on the ground. Atrides spoil'd; and left them on the plain: Vain was their youth, their glittering armour vain: Now foil'd with dust, and naked to the sky, Their fnowy limbs and beauteous bodies lie.

Two sons of Priam next to battle move,
The product one of marriage, one of love?
In the same car the brother warriours ride,
This took the charge to combat, that to guide:
Tar other task! than when they wont to keep,
On Ida's tops, their father's sleecy sheep,

Y 3

Thefe

These on the mountains once Achilles found. And captive led, with pliant ofiers bound; Then to their fire for ample fums reftor'd; But now to perish by Atrides' sword; Pierc'd in the breast the base-born Isus bleeds : Cleft through the head, his brother's fate succeeds. Swift to the spoil the hasty victor falls, And stript, their features to his mind recalls. The Trojans fee the youths untimely die, But helpless tremble for themselves, and fly. So when a lion, ranging o'er the lawns, Finds, on some graffy lair, the couching fawns, Their bones he cracks, their reeking vitals draws, 155 And grinds the quivering flesh with bloody jaws; The frighted hind beholds, and dares not stay, But swift through rustling thickets, bursts her way; All drown'd in fweat the panting mother flies, And the big tears roll trickling from her eyes. 160 Amidst the tumult of the routed train,

The fons of false Antimachus were slain; He, who for bribes his faithless counsels fold, And voted Helen's flay for Paris' gold. Atrides mark'd, as these their safety sought, And flew the children for the father's fault; Their headstrong horse unable to restrain, They shook with fear, and dropp'd the filken rein; Then in their chariot on their knees they fall, And thus with lifted hands for mercy call.

Oh spare our youth, and for the life we owe Antimachus shall copious gifts bestow,

Soon

ILIAD, BOOK XI. 327 Soon as he hears that, not in batttle flain, The Grecian ships his captive sons detain, Large heaps of brass in ransom shall be told, 175 And steel well-temper'd, and perfuasive gold. These words attended with a flood of tears, The youths address'd to unrelenting ears: The vengeful monarch gave this stern reply; If from Antimachus ye spring, ye die: The daring wretch who once in council flood To fled Ulysses' and my brother's blood, For proffer'd peace! and fues his feed for grace! No, die, and pay the forfeit of your race. This faid, Pisander from the car he cast, 185 And pierc'd his breast: supine he breath'd his last. His brother leap'd to earth; but as he lay, The trenchant falchion lopp'd his hands away; His fever'd head was tofs'd among the throng, And, rolling, drew a bloody trail along. 190 Then, where the thickest fought, the victor flew; The king's example all his Greeks purfue. Now by the foot the flying foot were flain, Horse trod by horse, lay foaming on the plain. From the dry fields thick clouds of dust arise, 195 Shade the black hoft, and intercept the fkies. The brass-hoof'd steeds tumultuous plunge and bound, And the thick thunder beats the labouring ground. Still flaughtering on, the king of men proceeds; The distanc'd army wonders at his deeds. As when the winds with raging flames conspire, And o'er the forests roll the flood of fire, In

In blazing heaps the grove's old honours fall,
And one refulgent ruin levels all:
Before Atrides' rage so sinks the foe,
Whole squadrons vanish, and proud heads lie low:
The steeds sty trembling from his waving sword;
And many a car, now lighted of its lord,
Wide o'er the field with guideless fury rolls,
Breaking their ranks, and crushing out their souls;
While his keen falchion drinks the warriours lives;
More grateful, now, to vultures than their wives!
Perhaps great Hector then had found his fate,
But Jove and Destiny prolong'd his date.
Safe from the darts, the care of heaven he stood,
Amidst alarms, and death, and dust, and blood.

Now past the tomb where ancient Ilus lay, Through the mid field the routed urge their way. Where the wild figs th' adjoining summit crown, That path they take, and speed to reach the town. 220 As fwift Atrides with loud shouts pursued, Hot with his toil, and bath'd in hostile blood, Now near the beach-tree, and the Scæan gates, The hero halts, and his affociates waits. Meanwhile on every fide, around the plain, Dispers'd, disorder'd, fly the Trojan train. So flies a herd of beeves, that hear difmay'd The lion's roaring through the midnight shade; On heaps they tumble with successless haste: The favage feizes, draws, and rends the last : 230 Not with less fury stern Atrides flew, Still press'd the rout, and still the hindmost slew;

Harl

Hurl'd from their cars the bravest chiefs are kill'd, And rage, and death, and carnage, load the field.

Now storms the victor at the Trojan wall;
Surveys the towers, and meditates their fall.
But Jove descending shook th' Idæan hills,
And down their summits pour'd a hundred rills:
Th' unkindled lightnings in his hand he took,
And thus the many-colour'd Maid bespoke.

Iris, with haste thy golden wings display,
To god-like Hector this our word convey.
While Agamemnon wastes the ranks around,
Fights in the front, and bathes with blood the ground,
Bid him give way; but issue forth commands, 245.
And trust the war to less important hands:
But when, or wounded by the spear or dart,
That chief shall mount his chariot, and depart:
Then Jove shall string his arm, and fire his breast,
Then to her ships shall slying Greece be press'd, 250.
Till to the main the burning sun descend,
And sacred night her awful shade extend.

He spoke, and Iris at his word obey'd;
On wings of winds descends the various Maid.
The chief she found amidst the ranks of war,
Close to the bulwarks on his glittering car.
The Goddess then: O son of Priam, hear!
From Jove I come, and his high mandate bear.
While Agamemnon wastes the ranks around,
Fights in the front, and bathes with blood the ground,
Abstain from fight, yet issue forth commands,
And trust the war to less important hands.

But

But when, or wounded by the spear or dart,
The chief shall mount his chariot, and depart:
Then Jove shall string thy arm, and fire thy breast,
Then to her ships shall slying Greece be prest,
Till to the main the burning sun descend,
And sacred night her awful shade extend.

She faid, and vanish'd: Hector, with a bound,
Springs from his chariot on the trembling ground, 270
In clanging arms: he grasps in either hand
A pointed lance, and speeds from band to band;
Revives their ardour, turns their steps from slight,
And wakes anew the dying slames of sight.
They stand to arms: the Greeks their onset dare, 275
Condense their powers, and wait the coming war.
New force, new spirit, to each breast returns:
The sight renew'd, with siercer sury burns:
The king leads on; all fix on him their eye,
And learn from him to conquer, or to die.

230

Ye facred nine, celestial Muses! tell,
Who fac'd him first, and by his prowess fell?
The great Iphidamas, the bold and young:
From sage Antenor and Theano sprung;
Whom from his youth his grandsire Cisseus bred, 285
And nurs'd in Thrace where snowy slocks are fed,
Scarce did the down his rosy cheeks invest,
And early honour warm his generous breast,
When the kind sire consign'd his daughter's charms
(Theano's sister) to his youthful arms.

290
But call'd by glory to the wars of Troy,
He leaves untasted the first fruits of joy;

From

E

FS

1

A

0

B

W

While.

From his lov'd bride departs with melting eyes, And fwift to aid his dearer country flies. With twelve black ships he reach'd Percope's strand, Thence took the long laborious march by land. Now fierce for fame before the ranks he fprings, Towering in arms, and braves the king of kings. Atrides first discharg'd the missive spear; The Trojan stoop'd, the javelin pass'd in air. Then near the corfelet, at the monarch's heart, With all his strength the youth directs his dart : But the broad belt, with plates of filver bound, The point rebated, and repell'd the wound. Encumber'd with the dart, Atrides stands, Till, grasp'd with force, he wrench'd it from his hands, At once his weighty fword discharg'd a wound Full on his neck, that fell'd him to the ground. Stretch'd in the dust th' unhappy warriour lies, And fleep eternal feals his fwimming eyes. Oh worthy better fate! oh early flain! Thy country's friend; and virtuous, though in vain ! No more the youth shall join his confort's side, At once a virgin, and at once a bride! No more with presents her embraces meet, 315 Or lay the spoils of conquest at her feet, On whom his passion, lavish of his store, Bestow'd so much, and vainly promis'd more! Unwept, uncover'd, on the plain he lay, While the proud victor bore his arms away. Coon, Antenor's eldest hope, was nigh: Tears, at the fight, came starting from his eye,

While pierc'd with grief the much-lov'd youth he view'd, And the pale features now deform'd with blood. Then with his spear, unseen, his time he took, 325. Aim'd at the king, and near his elbow strook. The thrilling steel transpierc'd the brawny part, And through his arm flood forth the barbed dart. Surpris'd the monarch feels, yet void of fear On Coon rushes with his lifted spear: 330 His brother's corpfe the pious Trojan draws, And calls his country to affert his caufe, Defends him breathless on the sanguine field; And o'er the body spreads his ample shield. Atrides, marking an unguarded part, 335 Transfix'd the warriour with the brazen dart; Prone on his brother's bleeding breaft he lay, The monarch's faulchion lopp'd his head away: The focial shades the same dark journey go, And join each other in the realms below. 340 The vengeful victor rages round the fields, With every weapon, art or fury yields: By the long lance, the fword, or pondrous stone, Whole ranks are broken, and whole troops o'erthrown. This, while yet warm, distill'd the purple flood; 345 But when the wound grew stiff with clotted blood, Then grinding tortures his strong bosom rend, Less keen those darts the fierce Ilythiæ send, (The powers that cause the teeming matron's throes, Sad mothers of unutterable woes!) Stung with the fmart, all-panting with the pain, He mounts the car, and gives his squire the rein :

Then

1

T

So

Then with a voice which fury made more strong, And pain augmented, thus exhorts the throng.

O friends! O Greeks! affert your honours won; Proceed, and finish what this arm begun: Lo! angry Jove forbids your chief to stay, And envies half the glories of the day.

He faid; the driver whirls his lengthful thong;
The horses sly! the chariot smokes along.
Clouds from their not rils the fierce coursers blow,
And from their sides the foam descends in snow;
Shot through the battle in a moment's space,
The wounded monarch at his tent they place.

No fooner Hector saw the king retir'd,

But thus his Trojans and his aids he fir'd;

Hear, all ye Dardan, all ye Lycian race!

Fam'd in close fight, and dreadful face to face.

Now call to mind your ancient trophies won,

Your great forefathers' virtues, and your own.

Behold the general flies! deserts his powers!

Lo Jove himself declares the conquest ours!

Now on you ranks impel your foaming steeds;

And, sure of glory, dare immortal deeds.

With words like these the siery chief alarms
His fainting host, and every bosom warms.
As the bold hunter chears his hounds, to tear
The brindled lion, or the tusky bear;
With voice and hand provoke their doubting heart,
And springs the foremost with his listed dart:
So god-like Hector prompts his troops to dare;
Nor prompts alone, but leads himself the war.

On

On the black body of the foes he pours; As from the cloud's deep bosom, swell'd with showers, A fudden from the purple ocean fweeps, 385. Drives the wild waves, and toffes all the deeps. Say, Muse! when Jove the Trojans' glory crown'd, Beneath his arm what heroes bit the ground? Affæns, Dolops, and Autonous dy'd, Opites next was added to their fide, 390 Then brave Hipponous fam'd in many a fight, Opheltius, Orus, funk to endless night; Æsymnus, Agelaus; all chiefs of name; The rest were vulgar deaths, unknown to fame. As when a western whirlwind, charg'd with storms, Dispels the gather'd clouds that Notus forms; The guft continued, violent, and ftrong, Rolls fable clouds in heaps on heaps along; Now to the fkies the foaming billows rears, Now breaks the furge, and wide the bottom bares: Thus raging Hector, with refiftless hands, O'erturns, confounds, and scatters all their bands. Now the last ruin the whole host appalls; Now Greece had trembled in her wooden walls; But wife Ulysses call'd Tydides forth, 405 His foul rekindled, and awak'd his worth. And stand we deedless, O eternal shame! Till Hector's arm involve the ships in flame ? Hafte, let us join, and combat fide by fide. The warriour thus, and thus the friend reply'd. No martial toil I shun, no danger fear;

Let Hector come; I wait his fury here,

But

But Jove with conquest crowns the Trojan train; And, Jove our foe, all human force is vain.

He figh'd; but, fighing, rais'd his vengeful steel,
And from his car the proud Thymbræus sell:
Molion, the charioteer, pursued his lord,
His death ennobled by Ulysses' sword.
There slain, they left them in eternal night,
Then plung'd amidst the thickest ranks of fight.
So two wild boars outstrip the following hounds,
Then swift revert, and wounds return for wounds.
Stern Hector's conquests in the middle plain
Stood check'd a while, and Greece respir'd again.

The fons of Merops shone amidst the war; Towering they rode in one refulgent car: In deep prophetic arts their father skill'd, Had warn'd his children from the Trojan field; Fate urg'd them on; the father warn'd in vain, They rush'd to fight, and perish'd on the plain ! Their breafts no more the vital spirit warms; The stern Tydides strips their shining arms. Hypirochus by great Ulysses dies, And rich Hippodamus becomes his prize, Great Jove from Ide with flaughter fills his fight, 435 And level hangs the doubtful scale of fight. , By Tydeus' lance Agastrophus was slain, The far-fam'd hero of Pæonian strain; Wing'd with his fears, on foot he strove to fly, His steeds too distant, and the foe too nigh; Through broken orders, fwifter than the wind, The fled, but flying left his life behind. This

This Hector sees, as his experienc'd yes Traverse the files, and to the rescue slies; Shouts, as he past, the crystal regions rend, And moving armies on his march attend. Great Diomed himself was seiz'd with fear, And thus bespoke his brother of the war.

445

Mark how this way yon bending fquadrons yield! The form rolls on, and Hector rules the field: Here fland his utmost force-The warriour faid; Swift at the word, his pondrous javelin fled; Nor miss'd its aim, but where the plumage danc'd, Raz'd the smooth cone, and thence obliquely glanc'd. Safe in his helm (the gift of Phœbus' hands) Without a wound the Trojan hero stands: But yet fo stunn'd, that, staggering on the plain, His arm and knee his finking bulk fustain; O'er his dim fight the mifty vapours rife, And a short darkness shades his swimming eyes. Tydides follow'd to regain his lance; While Hector rose, recover'd from the trance; Remounts his car, and herds amidst the croud: The Greek purfues him, and exults aloud.

Once more thank Phoebus for thy forfeit breath,
Or thank that fwiftness which outstrips the death.
Well by Apollo are thy prayers repaid,
And oft that partial power has lent his aid.
Thou shalt not long the death deserv'd withstand,
If any God affist Tydides' hand.

470
Fly then, inglorious! but thy slight, this day,
Whole hecatombs of Trojan ghosts shall pay.

Him,

It

Him, while he triumph'd, Paris ey'd from far,

(The spouse of Helen, the fair cause of war)

Around the sields his feather'd shafts he sent,

From ancient Ilus' ruin'd monument;

Behind the column plac'd, he bent his bow,

And wing'd an arrow at th' unwary foe;

Just as he stoop'd, Agastrophus's crest

To seize, and drew the corselet from his breast,

The bow-string twang'd; nor slew the shaft in vain,

But pierc'd his foot, and nail'd it to the plain.

The laughing Trojan, with a joyful spring,

Leaps from his ambush, and insults the king.

He bleeds! (he cries) some God has sped my dart;
Would the same God had but it in his heart!
So Troy, reliev'd from that wide-wasting hand,
Should breathe from slaughter, and in combat stand;
Whose sons now tremble at his darted spear,
As scatter'd lambs the rushing lion fear.

He dauntless thus: Thou conqueror of the fair,
Thou woman-warriour with the curling hair;
Vain archer! trusting to the distant dart,
Unskill'd in arms to act a manly part!
Thou hast but done what boys or women can;
Such hands may wound, but not incense a man.
Nor boast the scratch thy feeble arrow gave,
A coward's weapon never hurts the brave.
Not so this dart, which thou may st one day feel:
Fate wings its slight, and death is on the steel.
Where this but lights, some noble life expires;
Its touch makes orphans, bathes the cheeks of sires,
Vol. I.

Steeps earth in purple, gluts the birds of air,
And leaves such objects, as distract the fair.
Ulysses hastens with a trembling heart,
Before him steps, and bending draws the dart:
Forth slows the blood; an eager pang succeeds;
Tydides mounts, and to the navy speeds.
Now on the field Ulysses stands alone,

The Greeks all fled, the Trojans pouring on:

But stands collected in himself and whole,

And questions thus his own unconquer'd soul.

What farther subterfuge, what hopes remain?
What shame, inglorious, if I quit the plain?
What danger, singly if I stand the ground,
My friends all scatter'd, all the soes around?
Yet wherefore doubtful? let this truth suffice;
The brave meets danger, and the coward slies:
To die or conquer, proves a hero's heart;
And knowing this, I know a soldier's part.

Such thoughts revolving in his careful breaft,
Near, and more near, the shady cohorts prest;
These, in the warriour, their own fate inclose:
And round him deep the steely circle grows.
So fares a boar whom all the troop surrounds
Of shooting huntsmen, and of clamorous hounds;
He grinds his ivory tusks; he foams with ire;
His sanguine eye-balls glare with living fire;
By these, by those, on every part is ply'd;
And the red slaughter spreads on every side.

Pierc'd through the shoulder, first Deiopis fell;
Next Ennomus and Thoon sunk to hell;

Cherfidamas,

Stopt short of life, nor with his entrails mix'd.

The wound not mortal wife Ulysses knew,
Then furious thus (but first some steps withdrew):
Unhappy man! whose death our hands shall grace!
Fate calls thee hence, and finish'd is thy race.
No longer check my conquests on the foe;
But, pierc'd by this, to endless darkness go,
And add one spectre to the realms below!

By Pallas' care, the fpear, though deep infix'd,

He spoke; while Socus, seiz'd with sudden fright, Trembling gave way, and turn'd his back to slight; Between his shoulders pierc'd the following dart, And held its passage through the panting heart. Wide in his breast appear'd the grizly wound; He falls; his armour rings against the ground.

2 2

Tlen

Then thus Ulysses, gazing on the slain:
Fam'd son of Hippasus! there press the plain; 565
There ends thy narrow span assign'd by Fate,
Heaven owes Ulysses yet a longer date.
Ah, wretch! no father shall thy corpse compose,
Thy dying eyes no tender mother close;
But hungry birds shall tear those balls away,
And hovering vultures scream around their prey.
Me Greece shall honour, when I meet my doom,
With solemn funerals and a lasting tomb.

Then, raging with intolerable fmart, He writhes his body, and extracts the dart. The dart a tide of spouting gore pursued, And gladden'd Troy with fight of hostile blood. Now troops on troops the fainting chief invade, Forc'd he recedes, and loudly calls for aid. Thrice to its pitch his lofty voice he rears; The well-known voice thrice Menelaus hears: Alarm'd, to Ajax Telamon he cry'd, Who shares his labours, and defends his side. O friend! Ulyffes' shouts invade my ear; Distress'd he seems, and no assistance near: 585 Strong as he is; yet, one oppos'd to all, Oppress'd by multitudes, the best may fall. Greece, robb'd of him, must bid her host despair, And feel a loss, not ages can repair.

Then, where the cry directs, his course he bends; Great Ajax, like the God of war, attends. The prudent chief in sore distress they found, With bands of surious Trojans compass'd round.

As

As when some huntsman, with a flying spear, From the blind thicket wounds a stately deer; 595 Down his cleft fide while fresh the blood distills, He bounds aloft, and scuds from hills to hills: Till life's warm vapour iffuing through the wound, Wild mountain-wolves the fainting beaft furround; Just as their jaws his prostrate limbs invade, The lion rushes through the woodland shade, The wolves, though hungry, fcour dispers'd away; The lordly favage vindicates his prey. Ulysses thus, unconquer'd by his pains, A fingle warriour, half an hoft fustains : But soon as Ajax heaves his tower-like shield, The scatter'd crouds fly frighted o'er the field; Atrides' arm the finking hero stays, And, fav'd from numbers, to his car conveys.

Victorious Ajax plies the routed crew;
And first Doryclus, Priam's son, he slew,
On strong Pandocus next inflicts a wound,
And lays Lysander bleeding on the ground.
As when a torrent, swell'd with wintery rains,
Pours from the mountains o'er the delug'd plains,
And pines and oaks, from their soundations torn,
A country's ruins! to the seas are borne:
Fierce Ajax thus o'erwhelms the yielding throng;
Men, steeds, and chariots, roll in heaps along.

But Hector, from this scene of slaughter far, 626
Rag'd on the left, and rul'd the tide of war:
Loud groans proclaim his progress through the plain,
And deep Scamander swells with heaps of slain.

Z 3

T'aera

There Neftor and Idomeneus oppose The warriour's fury, there the battle glows; 625 There fierce on foot, or from the chariot's height, His fword deforms the beauteous ranks of fight... The spouse of Helen dealing darts around, Had pierc'd Machaon with a diftant wound: In his right shoulder the broad shaft appear'd, And trembling Greece for her physician fear'd. To Neftor then Idomeneus begun : Glory of Greece, old Neleus' valiant fon! Ascend thy chariot, haste with speed away, And great Machaon to the ships convey. A wife physician, skill'd our wounds to heal, Is more than armies to the public weal. Old Nestor mounts the seat: beside him rode The wounded offspring of the healing God. He lends the lash; the steeds with sounding feet 640 Shake the dry field, and thunder toward the fleet.

But now Cebriones, from Hector's car,
Survey'd the various fortune of the war.
While here (he cry'd) the flying Greeks are flain;
Trojans on Trojans yonder load the plain. 645
Before great Ajax fee the mingled throng
Of men and chariots driven in heaps along!
I know him well, distinguish'd o'er the field
By the broad glittering of the seven-fold shield.
Thither, O Hector, thither urge thy steeds, 650
There danger calls, and there the combat bleeds,
There horse and foot in mingled deaths unite,
And groans of slaughter mix with shouts of fight.

Thus

Thus having spoke, the driver's lash resounds; Swift through the ranks the rapid chariot bounds; 655 Stung by the stroke, the courfers scour the fields, O'er heaps of carcasses, and hills of shields. The horses' hoofs are bath'd in heroes' gore, And, dashing, purple all the car before; The groaning axle fable drops distills, And mangled carnage clogs the rapid wheels. Here Hector, plunging through the thickest fight, Broke the dark phalanx, and let in the light: (By the long lance, the fword, or pondrous stone, The ranks lie scatter'd, and the troops o'erthrown) Ajax he shuns, through all the dire debate, And fears that arm, whose force he felt so late. But partial Jove, espousing Hector's part, Shot heaven-bred horrour through the Grecian's heart; Confus'd, 'unnerv'd in Hector's presence grown, Amaz'd he stood, with terrours not his own. O'er his broad back his moony shield he threw, And, glaring round, with tardy steps withdrew. Thus the grim lion his retreat maintains, Beset with watchful dogs, and shouting swains ; Repuls'd by numbers from the nightly stalls, Though rage impels him, and though hunger calls Long stands the showering darts, and missile fires; Then fourly flow th' indignant beaft retires. So turn'd stern Ajax, by whole hosts repell'd, While his fwoln heart at every step rebell'd.

As the flow beaft with heavy strength indued. In some wide field by troops of boys purfued,

Z 4

Though

Though round his fides a wooden tempest rain, Crops the tall harvest, and lays waste the plain; 685 Thick on his hide the hollow blows refound. The patient animal maintains his ground, Scarce from the field with all their efforts chas'd, And ftirs but flowly when he ftirs at laft. On Ajax thus a weight of Trojans hung, 690 The strokes redoubled on his buckler rung; Confiding now in bulky strength he stands Now turns, and backward bears the yielding bands; Now stiff recedes, yet hardly feems to fly, And threats his followers with retorted eye. / 695 Fix'd as the bar between two warring powers, While hiffing darts descend in iron showers: In his broad buckler many a weapon stood, Its furface briftled with a quivering wood; And many a javelin, guiltless on the plain, Marks the dry duft, and thirsts for blood in vain. But bold Eurypylus his aid imparts, And dauntless springs beneath a cloud of darts; Whose eager javelin lanch'd against the foe, Great Apisaon felt the fatal blow; From his torn liver the red current flow'd, And his flack knees defert their dying load. The victor rushing to despoil the dead, From Paris' bow a vengeful arrow fled: Fix'd in his nervous thigh the weapon stood, Fix'd was the point, but broken was the wood. Back to the lines the wounded Greek retir'd, Yet thus, retreating, his affociates fir'd.

What

What God, O Grecians! has your heart dismay'd? Oh, turn to arms; 'tis Ajax claims your aid. 715 This hour he stands the mark of hostile rage, And this the last brave battle he shall wage; Haste, join your forces; from the gloomy grave The warriour rescue, and your country save.

Thus urg'd the chief; a generous troop appears,
Who spread their bucklers, and advance their spears,
To guard their wounded friend: while thus they stand
With pious care, great Ajax joins the band:
Each takes new courage at the hero's sight;
The hero rallies and renews the sight.

Thus rag'd both armies like conflicting fires,
While Nestor's chariot far from fight retires:
His coursers steep'd in sweat, and stain'd with gore,
The Greeks preserver, great Machaon, bore.
That hour, Achilles from the topmost height
Of his proud sleet, o'erlook'd the fields of fight;
His feasted eyes beheld around the plain
The Grecian rout, the slaying, and the slain.
His friend Machaon singled from the rest,
A transient pity touch'd his vengeful breast.
Straight to Mencetius' much-lov'd son he sent;
Graceful as Mars, Patroolus quits his tent:
In evil hour! Then sate decreed his doom;
And fix'd the date of all his woes to come.

Why calls my friend? Thy lov'd injunctions lay, Whate'er thy will, Patroclus shall obey.

O first of friends! (Pelides thus reply'd)
Still at my heart, and ever at my side!

The time is come, when you despairing host
Shall learn the value of the man they lost:

Now at my knees the Greeks shall pour their moan,
And proud Atrides tremble on his throne.

Go now to Nester, and from him be taught
What wounded warriour late his chariet brought?

For, seen at distance, and but seen behind,

750
His form recall'd Machaon to my mind;
Nor could I, through you cloud, discern his face,
The coursers past me with so swift a pace.

The hero said. His friend obey'd with haste,
Through intermingled ships and tents he past;

755
The chiefs descending from their car he found;
The panting steeds Eurymedon unbound.

The warriours standing on the breezy shore,

To dry their sweat, and wash away the gore.

The panting steeds Eurymedon unbound.

The warriours standing on the breezy shore,

To dry their sweat, and wash away the gore,

Here paus'd a moment, while the gentle gale

Convey'd that freshness the cool seas exhale;

Then to consult on farther methods went,

And took their seats beneath the shady tent.

The draught prescrib'd, fair Hecamede prepares,

Arsnous' daughter, grac'd with golden hairs:

(Whom to his aged arms, a royal slave,

Greece, as the prize of Nestor's wisdom, gave)

A table first with azure feet she plac'd;

Whose ample orb a brazen charger grac'd:

Honey new-pres'd, the facred flower of wheat.

770

And wholsome garlick crown'd the savory treat.

Next her white hand a spacious goblet brings, A goblet sacred to the Pylian kings

From

Glittering with golden studs, four handles grace;
And curling vines around each handle roll'd
Support two turtle-doves emboss'd in gold.
A massy weight, yet heav'd with ease by him,
When the brisk nectar overlook'd the brim.
Temper'd in this, the nymph of form divine
Pours a large portion of the Pramnian wine;
With goat's-milk cheese a flavorous taste bestows,
And last with flour the smiling surface strows
This for the wounded prince the dame prepares;
The cordial beverage reverend Nestor shares:
Salubrious draughts the warriours' thirst allay,
And pleasing conference beguiles the day.

Meantine Patroclus, by Achilles sent.

Meantime Patroclus, by Achilles sent,
Unheard approach'd, and stood before the tent.
Old Nestor rising then, the hero led
To his high seat; the chief refus'd, and said,

'Tis now no feason for these kind delays;
The great Achilles with impatience stays.
To great Achilles this respect I owe;
Who asks what hero, wounded by the foc,
Was borne from combat by thy foaming steeds.
With grief I see the great Machaon bleeds,
This to report, my hasty course I bend;
Thou know'st the fiery temper of my friend.

Can then the fons of Greece (the fage rejoin'd) 800 Excite compassion in Achilles' mind?
Seeks he the forrows of our host to know?
This is not half the story of our woe.

Tell him, not great Machaon bleeds alone. Our bravest heroes in the navy groan, Ulysses, Agamemnon, Diomed, And stern Eurypylus, already bleed. But ah !, what flattering hopes I entertain ! Achilles heeds not, but derides our pain : Ev'n till the flames confume our fleet he stays, And waits the rifing of the fatal blaze. Chief after chief the raging foe destroys; Calm he looks on, and every death enjoys. Now the flow course of all-impairing time Unftrings my nerves, and ends my manly prime; 815 Oh! had I still that strength my youth posses'd, When this bold arm th' Epeian powers oppress'd, The bulls of Elis in glad triumph led, And stretch'd the great Itymonæus dead! Then, from my fury fled the trembling swains, 820 And ours was all the plunder of the plains: Fifty white flocks, full fifty herds of fvene, As many goats, as many løwing kine: And thrice the number of unrival'd steeds, All teeming females, and of generous breeds. 825 These, as my first essay of arms, I won; Old Neleus glory'd in his tonquering fon. Thus Elis forc'd, her long arrears reftor'd, And shares were parted to each Pylian lord. The state of Pyle was funk to last despair, When the proud Elians first commenc'd the war. For Neleus' fons Alcides' rage had flain; Of twelve bold brothers, I alone remain!

· Oppress'd

Oppress'd, we arm'd; and now this conquest gain'd, My fire three hundred chosen sheep obtain'd. 835 (That large reprifal he might juftly claim, For prize defrauded, and infulted fame, When Elis' monarch at the public course Detain'd his chariot and victorious horse.) The rest the people shar'd; myself survey'd The just partition, and one victims pay'd. Three days were past, when Elis rose to war, With many a courfer, and with many a car; The fons of Actor at their army's head (Young as they were) the vengeful squadrons led. 845 High on a rock fair Thryoëssa stands, Our utmost frontier on the Pylian lands; Not far the streams of fam'd Alphæus flow; The stream they pass'd, and pitch'd their tents below. Pallas, descending in the shades of night, Alarms the Pylians, and commands the fight. Each burns for fame, and swells with martial pride; Myself the foremost; but my fire deny'd; Fear'd for my youth, expos'd to stern alarms; And stopp'd my chariot, and detain'd my arms. 855 My fire deny'd in vain : on foot I fled Amidst our chariots: for the Goddess led.

Along fair Arene's delightful plain,
Soft Minyas rolls his waters to the main.
There, horse and foot, the Pylian troops unite,
And, sheath'd in arms, expect the dawning light.
Thence, ere the sun advanc'd his noon-day flame,
To great Alphæus' sacred source we came.

There

There first to Jove our solemn rites were paid; An untam'd heifer pleas'd the blue-ey'd Maid; A bull Alphæus; and a bull was slain	865
To the blue monarch of the watery main.
In arms we slept, beside the winding slood,
While round the town the fierce Epeians stood.
Soon as the fun, with all-revealing ray,	870
Flam'd in the front of heaven, and gave the day;	387
Bright scenes of arms, and works of war appear;
The nations meet; there Pylos, Elis here.
The first who fell, beneath my javelin bled;	edil'
King Augits' fon, and spouse of Agamede:	875
(She that all fimples' healing virtues knew,	150
And every herb that drinks the morning dew.)
I seiz'd his car, the van of battle led;
Th' Epeians faw, they trembled, and they fled.
The foe dispers'd, their bravest warriour kill'd,	880
Fierce as a whirlwind now I swept the field:
Full fifty captive chariots grac'd my train;
Two chiefs from each, fell breathless to the plain.
Then Actor's fon had dy'd, but Neptune shrouds
The youthful heroes in a veil of clouds.	889
O'er heapy shields, and o'er the prostrate throng,
Collecting spoils, and slaughtering all along,
Through wide Buprasian fields we forc'd the foes,	1
Where o'er the vales th' Olenian rocks arofe;	1
	1
	10)
Ev'n there the hindmost of their rear I slay,	1
And the same arm that led, concludes the day,	}
Then back to Pyle triumphant take my way.	, )
T	here

ILIAD, BOOK XI. There to high Jove were public thanks affign'd, As first of Gods; to Nestor, of mankind. Such then I was, impell'd by youthful blood; So prov'd my valour for my country's good." Achilles with unactive fury glows, And gives to passion what to Greece he owes. How shall he grieve, when to th' eternal shade Her hofts shall fink, nor his the power to aid? O friend! my memory recalls the day, When, gathering aids along the Grecian fea, I, and Ulysses, touch'd at Pthia's port, And enter'd Peleus' hospitable court. A bull to Jove he flew in facrifice, And pour'd libations on the flaming thighs. Thyfelf, Achilles, and thy reverend fire Menœtius, turn'd the fragments on the fire. Achilles sees us, to the feast invites; Social we fit, and share the genial rites. We then explain'd the cause on which we came, Urg'd you to arms, and found you fierce for fame. Your ancient fathers generous precepts gave; Peleus faid only this-" My fon! be brave," Mencetius thus: "Though great Achilles Thine " In strength superior, and of race divine, "Yet cooler thoughts thy elder years attend; " Let thy just counsels aid, and rule thy friend." Thus spoke your father at Thessalia's court; 920 Words now forgot, though now of vast import. Ah! try the utmost that a friend can say, Such gentle force the fiercest minds, obey.

Some

Some favouring God Achilles' heart may move;
Though deaf to glory, he may yield to love.

1 If some dire oracle his breast alarm,
If aught from heaven with-hold his saving arm;
Some beam of comfort yet on Greece may shine,
If thou but lead the Myrmidonian line;
Clad in Achilles' arms, if thou appear,
Proud Troy may tremble, and desist from war;
Press'd by fresh forces her o'er-labour'd train
Shall seek their walls, and Greece respire again.

This touch'd his generous heart, and from the tent
Along the shore with hasty strides he went;
Soon as he came, where, on the crouded strand,
The public mart and courts of justice stand,
Where the tall steet of great Ulysses lies,
And altars to the guardian Gods arise;
There sad he met the brave Evæmon's son,
Large painful drops from all his members run;
An arrow's head yet rooted in his wound,
The sable blood in circles mark'd the ground.
As faintly reeling he confess'd the smart;
Weak was his pace, but dauntless was his heart;
945
Divine compassion touch'd Patroclus' breast,
Who, sighing, thus his bleeding friend address.

Ah, hapless leaders of the Grecian host!

Thus must ye perish on a barbarous coast?

Is this your fate, to glut the dogs with gore,

Far from your friends, and from your native shore?

Say, great Eurypylus! shall Greece yet stand?

Resists she yet the raging Hector's hand?

Or

ILIAD. BOOK XI.

Or are her heroes doom'd to die with shame, And this the period of our wars and fame?

Eurypylus replies: No more, my friend,
Greece is no more! this day her glories end.
Ev'n to the ships victorious Troy pursues,
Her force encreasing as her toil renews.
Those chiefs, that us'd her utmost rage to meet,
Lie pierc'd with wounds, and bleeding in the fleet.
But thou, Patroclus! act a friendly part,
Lead to my ships, and draw this deadly dart;
With lukewarm water wash the gore away,

With healing balms the raging smart allay, Such as sage Chiron, sire of pharmacy, Once taught Achilles, and Achilles thee.

Of two fam'd furgeons, Podalirius stands
This hour furrounded by the Trojan bands;
And great Machaon, wounded in his tent,

Now wants that succour which so oft he lent.

To him the chief. What then remains to do?
Th' event of things the Gods alone can view.
Charg'd by Achilles' great command I fly,
And bear with haste the Pylian king's reply:
But thy distress this instant claims relief.
He said, and in his arms upheld the chief.
The slaves their master's slow approach survey'd,

And hides of oxen on the floor display'd:

There stretch'd at length the wounded hero lay,

Patroclus cut the forky steel away.

Then in his hands a bitter root he bruis'd; The wound he wash'd, the styptic juice infus'd. The closing slesh that instant ceas'd to glow, The wound to torture, and the blood to flow.

Vol. I. As

THE

964

970

975

7/3

180

AX 2603 BARALL to grant the direct breach and a set as a STATE OF A SECURITY SECRETARY OF TO SECURE AS LOT OF STATE the distant to least of a stop of equal Section of the section of the section of The same of which we do not a new the for a containing at the test to say, in a second The Charles of the way here the place of the charles of the charle a party of a relative to the state of the st the control of the state of the that or rest of the day serve from south waret brack The transfer of the contraction of the party of the contraction of the The calls really to be set to led , about 1900 the state of the s Constitution of the Andrew State of the State State to the sale of the total and the sale of t and the publish man Train of Mikeness in word and che che pratting belavew nektoritating bac. the state of the Advistment and Advisory with he stole of anisoms doll-pid Wes dold a 30's will en Address and a thought of the standard of the s White bushess to the Notes of Deaths the half, but to the arms against the chief, but of Digovalida con tra and Carlo into the half. the light well at as under a political I have three the broad have a selected been less ! we had a but to have the settlered. I I have so that a country a character and a larger and I I be wound in wall the the wife wind safes of .... I do cloting flesh thet infint care a round, arrest of books and but gratter of brarew at I . .

T H'E

TWELFTH BOOK

OF THE

I L I A D.

Aa 2

THE ARGUMENT.

The Battle at the Grecian Wall.

THE Greeks being retired into their entrenchments, Hector attempts to force them; but it proving impossible to pass the ditch, Polydamas advises to quit their chariots, and manage the attack on foot. The Trojans follow his counsel, and, having divided their army into five bodies of foot, begin the assault. But upon the signal of an eagle with a serpent in his talons, which appear'd on the left hand of the Trojans, Polydamas endeavours to withdraw them again. This Hector opposes, and continues the attack; in which, after many actions, Sarpedon makes the first breach in the wall: Hector also casting a stone of a vast size, forces open one of the gates, and enters at the head of his troops, who victoriously pursue the Grecians even to their ships.

THE

I L I A D.

BOOK XII.

WHILE thus the hero's pious cares attend
The cure and safety of his wounded friend,
Trojans and Greeks with clashing shields engage,
And mutual deaths are dealt with mutual rage.
Nor long the trench or lofty walls oppose;
With Gods averse th' ill-sated works arose;
Their powers neglected, and no victim slain,
The walls were rais'd, the trenches sunk in vain.
Without the Gods, how short a period stands

Without the Gods, how short a period stands
The proudest monument of mortal hands!
This stood, while Hector and Achilles rag'd,
While sacred Troy the warring hosts engag'd;
But when her sons were slain, her city burn'd,
And what surviv'd of Greece to Greece return'd;
Then Neptune and Apollo shook the shore,
Then Ida's summits pour'd their watery store;
Rhesus and Rhodius then unite their rills,
Carefus roaring down the stony hills,
Æsopus, Granicus, with mingled force,
And Xanthus foaming from his fruitful source;
And gulphy Simois, rolling to the main
Helmets, and shields, and god-like heroes slain:

Thef

These turn'd by Phœbus from their wonted ways, Delug'd the rampire nine continual days; The weight of waters faps the yielding wall, 25 And to the fea the floating bulwarks fall. Inceffant cataracts the thunderer pours, And half the skies descend in sluicy showers. The God of Ocean, marching stern before, With his huge trident wounds the trembling shore, 30 Vast stones and piles from their foundation heaves. And whelms the fmoky ruin in the waves. Now fmooth'd with fand, and level'd by the flood, No fragment tells where once the wonder stood; In their old bounds the rivers roll again, 35 Shine 'twixt the hills, or wander o'er the plain.

But this the Gods in later times perform; As yet the bulwark flood, and brav'd the florm; The strokes yet echoed of contending powers; War thunder'd at the gates, and blood diftain'd the Smote by the arm of Jove, and dire difmay, Itowers. Close by their hollow ships the Grecians lay : Hector's approach in every wind they hear, And Hector's fury every moment fear. He, like a whirlwind, toss'd the scattering throng, 45 Mingled the troops, and drove the field along. So midft the dogs and hunters daring bands, Fierce of his might, a boar or lion stands; Arm'd foes around a dreadful eircle form, And hiffing javelins rain an iron ftorm : 50 His powers untam'd their bold affault defy, And where he turns, the rout disperse, or die :

He

ILIAD, BOOK XII. 359 He foams, he glares, he bounds against them all, And if he falls, his courage makes him fall. With equal rage encompass'd Hector glows; Exhorts his armies, and the trenches shows. The panting steeds impatient fury breathe, But fnort and tremble at the gulph beneath; Just on the brink they neigh, and paw the ground, And the turf trembles, and the skies resound. Eager they view'd the prospect dark and deep, Vaft was the leap, and headlong hung the fleep; The bottom bare, (a formidable show!) And briftled thick with sharpen'd stakes below. The foot alone this strong defence could force, And try the pass impervious to the horse. This faw Polydamas; who, wifely brave, Restrain'd great Hector, and this counsel gave. Oh thou! bold leader of the Trojan bands, And you, confederate chiefs from foreign lands! What entrance here can cumbrous chariots find, The stakes beneath, the Grecian walls behind? No pass through those, without a thousand wounds, No space for combat in you narrow bounds Proud of the favours mighty Jove has shown, On certain dangers we too rashly run: If 'tis his will our haughty foes to tame, Oh may this instant end the Grecian name! Here, far from Argos let their heroes fall, And one great day destroy, and bury all! 80 But should they turn, and here oppress our train, What hopes, what methods of retreat remain? Wedg d Aaz

Wedg'd in the trench, by our own troops confus'd,
In one promiseuous carnage crush'd and bruis'd;
All Troy must perish, if their arms prevail,
Nor shall a Trojan live to tell the tale.
Hear then, ye warriours! and obey with speed;
Back from the trenches let your steeds be led,
Then all alighting, wedg'd in firm array,
Proceed on foot, and Hector lead the way.
So Greece shall stoop before our conquering power,
And this (if Jove consent) her fatal hour.

This counsel pleas'd: the god-like Hector sprung Swift from his feat; his clanging armour rung. The chief's example follow'd by his train, Each quits his car, and issues on the plain. By orders strict the charioteers enjoin'd, Compel the coursers to their ranks behind. The forces part in five diftinguish'd bands, And all obey their feveral chiefs commands. The best and bravest in the first conspire, Pant for the fight, and threat the fleet with fire: Great Hector glorious in the van of these, Polydamas, and brave Cebriones. Before the next the graceful Paris shines, And bold Alcathous, and Agenor joins. The fons of Priam with the third appear, Deiphobus, and Helenus the feer; In arms with thefe the mighty Asius stood, Who drew from Hyrtacus his noble blood, And whom Arifba's yellow courfers bore, The courfers fed on Selle's winding shore.

Antenor's

ILIAD, BOOK XII.	301
Antenor's fons the fourth battalion guide,	S old L
And great Æneas, born on fountful Ide,	r a testaria
Divine Sarpedon the last band obey'd,	115
Whom Glaucus and Asteropæus aid,	T TO SEE SE
Next him, the bravest at their army's head,	EE ONE WAY
But he more brave than all the hofts he led.	Surge 5
Now with compacted shields in close array,
The moving legions speed their headlong way:	120
Already in their hopes they fire the fleet,
And fee the Grecians gasping at their feet.
While every Trojan thus, and every aid,	,
Th' advice of wife Polydamas obey'd;	Q HEAL
Afrus alone, confiding in his car,	. 125
His vaunted courfers urg'd to meet the war.	nice in Unhappy hero! and advis'd in vain!
Those wheels returning ne'er shall mark the pla	in;
No more those coursers with triumphant joy	a privat
Restore their master to the gates of Troy!	130
Black death attends behind the Grecian wall,	Lucia de la
And great Idomeneus shall boast thy fall.	Sold Cr
Fierce to the left he drives, where from the plain	1
The flying Grecians strove their ships to gain;
Swift through the wall their horse and chariots p	aft.
The gates half-open'd to receive the laft.	A STATE
Thither, exulting in his force, he flies:
His following hoft with clamours rend the fkies;
To plunge the Grecians headlong in the main,	Sugar.
Such their proud hones but all their house more	wain 1

Such their proud hopes, but all their hopes were vain To guard the gates, two mighty chiefs attend, Who from the Lapiths warlike race descend;

This

This Polypoetes, great Perithous' heir. And that Leonteus, like the God of war. As two tall oaks, before the wall they rife; Their roots in earth, their heads amidst the skies: Whose spreading arms with leasy honours crown'd, Forbid the tempelt, and protect the ground: High on the hill appears their fately form. And their deep roots for ever brave the storm. So graceful these, and so the shock they stand Of raging Asius, and his furious band. Orestes. Acamus, in front appear. And Oenomaus and Thoon close the rear : In vain their clamours shake the ambient fields, In vain around them beat their hollow shields; The fearless brothers on the Grecians call. To guard their navies, and defend the wall. Ev'n when they faw Troy's fable troops impend. And Greece tumultuous from her towers descend, 160 Forth from the portals rush'd th' intrepid pair. Oppos'd their breafts, and flood themselves the war. So two wild boars fpring furious from their den, Rous'd with the cries of dogs and voice of men; On every fide the crackling trees they tear, And root the shrubs, and lay the forest bare; They gnash their tusks, with fire their eye-balls roll, Till some wide wound lets out their mighty soul. Around their heads the whistling javelins sung, With founding strokes their brazen targets rung; 170 Fierce was the fight, while yet the Grecian powers Maintain'd the walls, and mann'd the lofty towers: Te

To fave their fleet, the last efforts they try,

And stones and darts in mingled tempests fly.

As when sharp Boreas blows abroad, and brings
The dreary winter on his frozen wings;
Beneath the low-hung clouds the sheets of snow
Descend, and whiten all the fields below:
So fast the darts on either army pour,
So down the rampires roll the rocky shower;
Heavy and thick, resound the batter'd shields,
And the deaf echo rattles round the fields.

With shame repuls'd, with grief and sury driven,
The frantic Assus thus accuses heaven:
In powers immortal who shall now believe?
In powers immortal who shall now believe?

Can those too slatter, and can Jove deceive?
What man could doubt but Troy's victorious power
Should humble Greece, and this her fatal hour?
But like when wasps from hollow crannies drive,
To guard the entrance of their common hive,
Darkening the rock, while with unweary'd wings
They strike th' assailants, and infix their stings;
A race determin'd, that to death contend:
So fierce these Greeks their last retreats defend.
Gods! shall two warriours only guard their gates, 195
Repel an army, and defraud the Fates?

These empty accents, mingled with the wind;
Nor mov'd great Jove's unalterable mind;
To god-like Hector and his matchless might
Was ow'd the glory of the destin'd fight.

Like deeds of arms through all the forts were try'd,
And all the gates sustain'd an equal tide;

Through

Through the long walls the stony showers were heard,
The blaze of slames, the slass of arms appear'd.
The spirit of a God my breast inspire,
205
To raise each act to life, and sing with fire!
While Greece unconquer'd kept alive the war,
Secure of death, considing in despair;
And all her guardian Gods, in deep dismay,
With unassisting arms deplor'd the day.
210

Ev'n yet the dauntless Lapithæ maintain
The dreadful pass, and round them heap the slain.
First Damasus, by Polypætes' steel
Pierc'd through his helmet's brazen vizor, fell;
The weapon drank the mingled brains and gore; 215
The warriour sinks, tremendous now no more!
Next Ormenus and Pylon yield their breath.
Nor less Leonteus strows the field with death:
First through the belt Hippomachus he gor'd,
Then sudden wav'd his unresisted sword; 220
Antiphates, as through the ranks he broke,
The faulchion struck, and sate pursued the stroke;
Iämenus, Orestes, Menon, bled;
And round him rose a monument of dead.

Meantime, the bravest of the Trojan crew,
Bold Hector and Polydamas pursue;
Fierce with impatience on the works to fall,
And wrap in rolling stames the steet and wall.
These on the farther bank now stood and gaz'd,
By heaven alarm'd, by prodigies amaz'd:
230
A signal omen stopp'd the passing host,
Their martial sury in their wonder lost.

Jove's

265

Toils unforeseen, and siercer, are decreed; More woes shall follow, and more heroes bleed. So bodes my soul, and bids me thus advise: For thus a skilful seer would read the skies.

To him then Hector with difdain return'd (Fierce as he spoke, his eyes with fury burn'd) Are these the faithful counsels of thy tongue? Thy will is partial, not thy reason wrong: 270 Or, if the purpose of thy heart thou vent, Sure heaven refumes the little fense it lent. What coward counfels would thy madness move, Against the word, the will reveal'd of Jove? The leading fign, th' irrevocable nod, 275 And happy thunders of the favouring God, These shall I slight? and guide my wavering mind. By wandering birds, that flit with every wind? Ye vagrants of the fky! your wings extend, Or where the funs arife, or where descend; To right, to left, unheeded take your way, While I the dictates of high heaven obey. Without a fign his fword the brave man draws, And asks no omen but his country's cause. But why shouldst thou suspect the war's success? 285 None fears-it more, as none promotes it less: Though all our chiefs amid you ships expire, Trust thy own cowardice t' escape their fire." Troy and her fons may find a general grave, But thou canst live, for thou canst be a flave. 290 Yet should the fears that wary mind suggests Spread their cold poison through our soldiers' breasts, My

My javelin can revenge so base a part, And free the foul that quivers in thy heart, Furious he spoke, and, rushing to the wall, Calls on his hoft; his hoft obey the call; With ardour follow where their leader flies ; Redoubling clamours thunder in the skies. Jove breathes a whirlwind from the hills of Ide, And drifts of duft the clouded navy hide: He fills the Greeks with terrour and difmay, And gives great Hector the predestin'd day. Strong in themselves, but stronger in their aid. Close to the works their rigid siege they laid. In vain the mounds and massy beams defend, While these they undermine, and those they rend; Upheave the piles that prop the folid wall; And heaps on heaps the smoky ruins falk. Greece on her rampart stands the fierce alarms; The crouded bulwarks blaze with waving arms, Shield touching shield, a long refulgent row: Whence histing darts, incessant, rain below. The bold Ajaces fly from tower to tower, And rouse, with flame divine, the Grecian power. The generous impulse every Greek obeys; 315-Threats urge the fearful; and the valiant, praife. Fellows in arms! whose deeds are known to fame,

Fellows in arms! whose deeds are known to fame,
And you whose ardour hopes an equal name!
Since not alike endued with force or art;
Behold a day when each may act his part!
A day to fire the brave, and warm the cold,
To gain new glories, or augment the old.

Urge

Urge those who stand; and those who faint, excite;
Drown Hector's vaunts in loud exhorts of fight;
Conquest, not safety, fill the thoughts of all;
Seek not your fleet, but sally from the wall;
So Jove once more may drive their routed train,
And Troy lie trembling in her walls again.

Their ardour kindles all the Grecian powers ; And now the stones descend in heavier showers. 330 As when high Jove his sharp artillery forms, And opes his cloudy magazine of ftorms; In winter's bleak, uncomfortable reign, A fnowy inundation hides the plain; He stills the winds, and bids the skies to sleep; 335 Then pours the filent tempelt, thick and deep: And first the mountain-tops are cover'd o'er, Then the green fields, and then the fandy shore; Bent with the weight the nodding woods are feen, And one bright waste hides all the works of men: 340 The circling feas alone abforbing all, Drink the diffolying fleeces as they fall. So from each fide increas'd the stony rain, And the white ruin rifes o'er the plain,

Thus god-like Hector and his troops contend 345
To force the ramparts, and the gates to rend;
Nor Troy could conquer, nor the Greeks would yield,
Till great Sarpedon tower'd amid the field;
For mighty Jove inspir'd with martial flame
His matchless son, and urg'd him on to fame.

350.
In arms he shines, conspicuous from afar,
And bears aloft his ample shield in air;

Within

Within whose orb the thick bull-hides were roll'd, Ponderous with brass, and bound with ductile gold: And while two pointed javelins arm his hands, Majestic moves along, and leads his Lycian bands.

So, press'd with hunger, from the mountains brow
Descends a lion on the flocks below;
So stalks the lordly savage o'er the plain,
In sullen majesty, and stern distain:
In vain loud mastives bay him from afar,
And shepherds gall him with an iron war;
Regardless, surious, he pursues his way;
He foams, he roars, he rends the panting prey.

Refolv'd alike, di ine Sarpedon glows
With generons rage that drives him on the foes.
He views the towers, and meditates their fall,
To fure destruction dooms th' aspiring wall;
Then, casting on his friend an ardent look,
Fir'd with the thirst of glory, thus he spoke.

Why boast we, Glaucus! our extended reign, Where Xanthus' streams enrich the Lycian plain, Our numerous herds that range the fruitful field, And hills where vines their purple harvest yield, Our foaming bowls with purer nectar crown'd, 375 Our feasts enhanc'd with musick's sprightly sound! Why on those shores are we with joy survey'd, Admir'd as heroes, and as Gods obey'd; Unless great acts superior merit prove, And vindicate the bounteous powers above? 386 'Tis ours, the dignity they give to grace; The first in valour, as the first in place:

Vol. I. Bb That

That when with wondering eyes our martial bands
Behold our deeds transcending our commands,
Such, they may cry, deserve the sovereign state,
Whom those that envy, dare not imitate!
Could all our care elude the gloomy grave,
Which claims no less the fearful than the brave,
For lust of same I should not vainly dare
In fighting fields, nor urge thy soul to war.
But since, alas! ignoble age must come,
Disease, and death's inexorable doom;
The life which others pay, let us bestow,
And give to same what we to nature owe;
Brave though we fall, and honour'd if we live,
395
Or let us glory gain, or glory give!

He faid; his words the liftening chief inspire With equal warmth, and rouse the warriour's fire; The troops purfue their leaders with delight, Rush to the foe, and claim the promis'd fight. 400 Menestheus from on high the storm beheld Threatening the fort, and blackening in the field: Around the walls he gaz'd, to view from far What aid appear'd t' avert th' approaching war, And faw where Teucer with th' Ajaces stood, 405 Of fight infatiate, prodigal of blood. In vain he calls; the din of helms and shields Rings to the fkies, and echoes through the fields. The brazen hinges fly, the walls refound, Heaven trembles, roar the mountains, thunders all the ground.

Then thus to Thoos; -Hence with speecd, (he said). And urge the bold Ajaces to our aid;

Their

ILIAD, BOOK XII.	371
Their strength, united, best may help to bear	as collect
The bloody labours of the doubtful war:	SHIP
Hither the Lycian princes bend their course,	415
The best and bravest of the hostile force.	a state
But if too fiercely there the foes contend;
Let Telamon at least our towers defend,	ANG SEE
And Teucer hafte with his unerring bow,	Profession of the Control of the Con
To share the danger, and repel the foe.	420
Swift at the word, the herald speeds along	$10E
The lofty ramparts, through the martial throng;	$ 6 U.S.
And finds the heroes bath'd in fweat and gore,	No.
Oppos'd in combat on the dufty shore.
Ye valiant leaders of our warlike bands!	425
Your aid (faid Thoos) Peteus' fon demands,
Your strength, united, best may help to bear
The bloody labours of the doubtful war:
Thither the Lycian princes bend their course,
The best and bravest of the hostile force.	430
But if too hercely here the foes contend,
At least, let Telamon those towers defend,
And Teucer hafte with his unerring bow,
To share the danger, and repel the foe.	1100
Straight to the fort great Ajax turn'd his care,	435
And thus bespoke his brothers of the war.	200
Now, valiant Lycomede! exert your might,
And, brave Oïleus, prove your force in fights
To you I trust the fortune of the field,
Till by this arm the foe shall be repell'd;	440
That done, expect me to complete the day-
Then, with his feven-fold shield, he strode away
Bb 2	With

With equal steps bold Teucer press'd the shore, Whose fatal bow the strong Pandion bore.

High on the walls appear'd the Lycian powers, 445 Like fome black tempest gathering round the towers; The Greeks, oppress'd, their utmost force unite, Prepar'd to labour in th' unequal fight; The war renews, mix'd shouts and groans arise; Tumultuous clamour mounts, and thickens in the skies. Fierce Ajax first th' advancing host invades, And fends the brave Epicles to the shades, Sarpedon's friend; across the warriour's way, Rent from the walls, a rocky fragment lay; In modern ages not the strongest swain Could heave th' unwieldy burthen from the plain. He pois'd, and fwung it round; then, tofs'd on high, It flew with force, and labour'd up the fky; Full on the Lycian's helmet thundering down, The ponderous ruin crush'd his batter'd crown. As skilful divers from some airy steep, Headlong descend, and shoot into the deep, So falls Epicles; then in groans expires, And murmuring to the shades the foul retires.

While to the ramparts daring Glaucus drew, 465
From Teucer's hand a winged arrow flew;
The bearded shaft the destin'd passage found,
And on his naked arm inslicts a wound.
The chief, who fear'd some foe's insulting boast
Might stop the progress of his warlike host, 470
Conceal'd the wound, and, leaping from his height,
Retir'd reluctant from th' unfinish'd fight.

Divine

Divine Sarpedon with regret beheld
Disabled Glaucus slowly quit the field;
His beating breast with generous ardour glows,
He springs to fight, and slies upon the foes.
Alcmaon first was doom'd his force to feel;
Deep in his breast he plung'd the pointed steel;
Then, from the yawning wound with fury tore
The spear, pursued by gushing streams of gore;
Down sinks the warriour with a thundering sound,
His brazen armour rings against the ground.

Swift to the battlement the victor flies. Tugs with full force, and every nerve applies; It shakes; the ponderous stones disjointed yield; 485 The rolling ruins smoke along the field. A mighty breach appears, the walls lie bare; And, like a deluge, rushes in the war. At once bold Teucer draws the twanging bow, And Ajax sends his javelin at the foe: Fix'd in his belt the feather'd weapon stood, And through his buckler drove the trembling wood; But Jove was present in the dire debate, To shield his offspring, and avert his fate. The prince gave back, not meditating flight, But urging vengeance, and severer fight; Then, rais'd with hope, and fir'd with glory's charms. His fainting squadrons to new fury warms. O where, ye Lycians! is the strength you boast? Your former fame and ancient virtue lost! 500 The breach lies open, but your chief in vain Attempts alone the guarded pass to gain:

Unite,

Unite, and foon that hostile fleet shall fall; The force of powerful union conquers all.

This just rebuke inflam'd the Lycian crew, 505 They join, they thicken, and th' affault renew; Unmov'd th' embodied Greeks their fury dare, And fix'd support the weight of all the war; Nor could the Greeks repel the Lycian powers, Nor the bold Lycians force the Grecian towers. 510 As, on the confines of adjoining grounds, Two stubborn swains with blows dispute their bounds; They tug, they fweat; but neither gain or yield, One foot, one inch, of the contended field: Thus obstinate to death they fight, they fall; Nor these can keep, nor those can win the wall. Their manly breafts are pierc'd with many a wound, Loud strokes are heard, and rattling arms refound, The copious flaughter covers all the shore, And the high ramparts drop with human gore:

As when two scales are charg'd with doubtful loads,

From side to side the trembling balance nods,
(While some laborious matron, just and poor,
With nice exactness weighs her woolly store):
Till, pois'd aloft, the resting beam suspends

Each equal weight; nor this, nor that, descends:
So stood the war, till Hector's matchless might
With Fates prevailing, turn'd the scale of sight.

Fierce as a whirlwind up the walls he slies,
And sires his host with loud repeated cries.

Advance, ye Trojans! lend your valiant hands,
Haste to the sleet, and tose the blazing brands!

They

They hear, they run; and gathering at his call, Raife scaling engines, and ascend the wall ; Around the works a wood of glittering spears 535 Shoots up, and all the rifing host appears. A ponderous stone bold Hector heav'd to throw, Pointed above, and rough and gross below: Not two strong men th' enormous weight could raise, Such men as live in these degenerate days. Yet this, as easy as a swain could bear The fnowy fleece, he tofs'd, and shook in air: For Jove upheld, and lighten'd of its load Th' unwieldy rock, the labour of a God. Thus arm'd, before the folded gates he came, 545 Of massy substance, and stupendous frame; With iron bars and brazen hinges strong, On lofty beams of folid timber hung: Then, thundering through the planks with forceful fway, Drives the sharp rock; the folid beams give way, The folds are shatter'd; from the crackling door Leap the resounding bars, the flying hinges roar. Now rushing in, the furious chief appears, Gloomy as night! and shakes two shining spears: A dreadful gleam from his bright armour came, 555 And from his eye-balls flash'd the living flame. He moves a God, refiftless in his course, And feems a match for more than mortal force. Then pouring after, through the gaping space, A tide of Trojans flows, and fills the place; The Greeks behold, they tremble, and they fly; The shore is heap'd with death, and tumult rends the sky.

CONTENTS

O F

THE FIRST VOLUME.

				Page
Mr. Pope's Preface,				1
ILIAD, Book I.				35
Book II.		The same		65
- Book III.	Marie Co.		85 g (1), 3 4 4 5 5	103
- Book IV.	-	-		125
Book V.	_	4		149
- Book VI.		Talanta e e e e e	-	189
- Book VII.				215
- Book VIII.	-	2000000		237
Book IX.	and anything			263
- Book X.				293
- Book XI.		TOTAL SHARE A CHAP		319
Book XII.		_		355
$2.2 excess and a	AST THE	MUS		a de A
				Dec alega a
DND	0 - 11	147

END OF VOL. I.

b, out remailtreachaithe dry.

